The Breaking Point of Love

Chapter 878

Even if Kieran hadn't said anything, Narcissa wouldn't have interfered in other people's affairs again. After what had happened before, she had learned her lesson. From now on, she would stay out of other people's business.

Having received her assurance, Kieran said nothing more and turned to leave.

Narcissa watched him go, her gaze eventually settling on Celeste, who was standing a short distance away.

When Celeste finally stepped away from the crowd, Narcissa approached her. "Ms. Rodriguez."

Celeste stopped when she saw her, but her expression remained unchanged. "Is there something you need, Ms. Lackspur?"

Narcissa lowered her head and spoke politely. "I was wrong about the kind of person I thought she was. I caused you a lot of trouble, and that was my fault. I'm sorry."

Celeste looked at her and replied coldly, "Is that so?"

She said nothing more and simply turned to leave.

Watching her walk away, Narcissa said again, "I'm sorry."

Celeste didn't stop or look back.

Matthias had noticed what happened between them. When Celeste returned from the restroom, he asked, "Was she stopping you just now to apologise?"

Celeste hummed a response.

Matthias raised an eyebrow. "Have you forgiven her?"

"No."

Matthias continued, "Fair enough. It's not as though the two of you will ever be friends or have anything to do with each other again. It doesn't really make a difference whether you forgive her or not."

After all, even if Narcissa apologised, she couldn't change what had happened in the past, nor could she make up for what Celeste had suffered. To Celeste, a casual apology like that was truly meaningless.

...

The following day, Celeste and Matthias went to the agreed meeting place to discuss the proposed collaboration with Conrad. However, when they arrived, Conrad was nowhere to be seen.

He had informed them in advance that he had some other matters to attend to, so neither Celeste nor Matthias thought much of his absence.

After they had wrapped up the discussions on the collaboration, Celeste picked up Jordyn and brought her to the Rodriguez residence. They spent the rest of the day lazing at home.

...

On Monday morning, not long after Celeste arrived at YodaVision, Matthias pushed open the door to her office in a rush.

He slapped his large palm against her desk and announced with a grin, "The verdict of the Locket Tech case is out!"

Celeste paused. "Already?"

She had thought that a case of this magnitude wouldn't be concluded until early next month at the earliest.

"Yeah."

"The result?"

"Two and a half billion dollars in damages. Not a cent less!"

Celeste smiled but said nothing more.

...

Meanwhile, the Lockets and Shaws were utterly devastated. They had only just received the news of the verdict.

Although they had more or less anticipated the outcome on the day of the hearing, actually seeing the judgment handed down was still more than they could bear.

"I—I can't believe this is real!" Linda's eyes were already red.

"Uncle Harvey, we have to appeal! O-Otherwise, how are we supposed to pay such an enormous sum?"

An appeal was certainly necessary. However, Velotra had prepared so thoroughly, with sue hr comprehensive evidence and a case so precisely constructed, that even an appeal was unlikely to change the outcome.

Miles had also heard about the court's decision. He immediately informed Beck before calling Wynn "I've heard about the verdict oo What are you planning to do? And what has Trevor said?"

In his view, this matter was far too important for Trevor not to have discussed a strategy with Wynn beforehand.

Wynn paused when she heard him mention Trevor. After a moment, she replied, "We're planning to appeal. As for Trevor... I'll contact him later."

"Alright. Let me know if you need anything."

"I will."

Miles said nothing more and ended the call.