The Breaking Point of Love

Chapter 887

Jordyn hung up before Trevor could respond to her outburst.

...

Despite trying every possible way to reach Trevor, Wynn still couldn't get through to him. The following day, the Locket family had no choice but to file an appeal with the court using the evidence they had gathered.

Trevor had been avoiding Wynn for so long that both the Lockets and Shaws were growing increasingly uneasy.

If Wynn were no longer able to enter and leave the Fleming Group freely, if Miles and the others had stopped keeping in touch with her, or if Trevor had actually told her that their relationship was over, they would have been worried by now.

But none of those things had happened.

Wynn was still free to come and go at the Fleming Group, Miles and Beck remained in contact with her, and Trevor had never mentioned breaking up with her.

At this moment, Wynn was just as uneasy as the rest of her family.

Although Trevor continued to avoid her, the fact that he hadn't brought up ending their relationship offered her some reassurance.

With their bank accounts and shares frozen, they were practically out of cash. Yet InnovaTech still needed funds to keep its operations running.

A quarter of InnovaTech's employees had already left, and the company was facing all kinds of problems with its projects, on top of its financial difficulties.

Wynn had spent the entire morning dealing with one problem after another. She was mentally and physically exhausted, yet had no idea how to turn things around.

Seeing Wynn in such a state, Lilian said, "There's no point rushing things with the company. If you're tired, why don't you go out for a while and clear your head?"

"Okay."

Wynn didn't say anything more. She picked up her car keys and left.

She drove around for a while, hoping to clear her mind, but her thoughts remained unsettled. Before she even realised it, she had driven into the car park beneath the Fleming Group's headquarters.

According to the news, Trevor had been busy with business discussions with Howard over the past few days. There was no guarantee he would be at the office.

Even so, Wynn got out of the car and entered the building.

She walked past the reception desk and was about to head towards Trevor's private lift, as she usually did.

But after she had taken only a couple of steps, the receptionist followed her and said, "Ms. Locket, could you wait a moment? We've received instructions today that, from now on, you won't be allowed into the office areas without an appointment. So..."

Wynn stopped in her tracks. Her grip on her handbag tightened, but her expression remained unchanged. In a calm voice, she replied, "Understood."

It was the afternoon tea break for Fleming Group's employees, so Wynn didn't linger. She just turned and left.

Once back in her car, she picked up her phone and called Jacob. "I'm downstairs at the Fleming Group. I've just been told that I won't be allowed inside without an appointment from now on. When did this instruction come into effect?"

Jacob was taken aback. "...Is that true? I'm only hearing about it now myself."

Wynn believed him.

If Jacob had known, he would most likely have informed her in advance.

After a brief pause, he said, "I'll check with Zeke later."

"All right. Thanks for your help."

Jacob said nothing more before ending the call. He then sent a message to Zeke, who was out with Trevor.

It wasn't long before Jacob called Wynn back. "I've checked with Zeke. He said Mr. Fleming instructed him to issue the notice this morning."

"Okay. I understand."

After hanging up, Wynn pressed her lips together. Her grip on the steering wheel tightened.

Until now, Trevor had nevert restricted her access to Fleming Group. Even when he ignored her Jacob and Zeke had always treated her with the utmost courtesy whenever she visited.

So, why the sudden change today? Could it have something to do with her visit to Jordyn yesterday? Had Jordyn complained to Trevor after returning home?