The Breaking Point of Love

Chapter 891

Conrad showed little reaction when he saw Wynn.

The other people in the private dining room seemed to assume that Wynn and Conrad had never met. They immediately introduced the two of them to each other.

Hearing this, Wynn greeted him as though they were meeting for the first time. "Hello, Mr. Mercer."

Conrad gave a slight nod.

After Wynn and Harvey took their seats, the host of the gathering, Alan Yarrow, made small talk with them. "I've heard a little about the dispute between Locket Tech and Velotra. Have you filed an appeal yet?"

"We have. Thank you for your concern, Mr. Yarrow," Harvey replied.

From the moment Wynn and Harvey had entered the room, Conrad had remained rather indifferent. He had picked up his phone and seemed to be replying to messages, showing little interest in the conversation between the others and Wynn.

However, when he heard this, he suddenly looked up from his phone and turned his gaze towards Wynn.

She noticed his attention and was momentarily taken aback.

Given the Mercer family's considerable standing in the country, Alan considered it an honour to have Conrad attend the dinner. However, he had only invited Wynn and Harvey because of Trevor.

Unaware of Conrad's sudden interest, Alan smiled at Wynn and asked, "I've heard Mr. Fleming hasn't been particularly busy lately. Why didn't you invite him to join us?"

Wynn withdrew her gaze from Conrad. Her expression remained unchanged as she replied, "He has other matters to attend to."

Alan was naturally a little disappointed. Still, he merely smiled and didn't pursue the matter, moving on to another topic instead.

Wynn noticed that Conrad had also looked away and returned to typing on his phone.

The others continued chatting throughout the meal, but Conrad rarely joined in.

When the meal was nearly over, Wynn left the private dining room to use the restroom. On her way back, she spotted Conrad standing near the entrance, making a phone call a short distance away.

Just as she passed him, he finished his call and turned around, their eyes meeting.

Although Wynn had the impression that Conrad wasn't particularly fond of her, she still gave him a polite nod in greeting.

Without waiting for his response, she was about to head back into the private dining room when Conrad suddenly spoke.

"Earlier, in the dining room, you said Trevor had other matters to attend to, which was why he couldn't join you tonight. But is that really the case?"

Wynn was frozen in place.

She hadn't expected him to speak to her so suddenly, much less point straight to her most vulnerable spot.

Her expression stiffened slightly, but she forced herself to remain composed.

As Wynn wondered why he would ask such a question, Conrad spoke again. "I also heard you and your father mention that you've filed an appeal against Velotra. It's been more than three months since Velotra first sued your company. Do you know that the person behind Velotra is your boyfriend, Trevor?"

Wynn was stunned. She wondered if she had heard him correctly. "What... did you just say?"

Although she asked, a chill had already crept up her spine, spreading through her entire body.

Conrad's expression didn't change. Even when he noticed the color draining from her face, he merely said in an even tone, "Judging by your reaction, I take it you didn't know."

Wynn stood completely rigid, unable to process what she had just heard.

Before she could react, she spotted Lilian and the rest of the family approaching from a short distance away. They were also dining at the. same venue that evening. It was just that they were not in the same gathering as Wynn and Harvey.

And judging by their expressions, they had clearly heard what Conrad had just said.

You're all caught up with The Breaking Point of Love.