

A Beauty With Multiple Masks Chapter 1859

You know what? Your mommy and I got to know each other through a beautiful surprise.” Harvey lifted his daughter, his mind replaying memories of the past.

He never expected the second encounter with the girl he had sex with that night would turn out that way.

That day, he followed Arielle’s instructions to pick up a girl who wanted to have an abortion. He did not want to go at first, for he did not want Arielle to reveal her identity because of a nobody. That was why he strongly disagreed with Arielle’s decision.

However, she told Harvey that Vinson knew about the matter, which was why Harvey had no choice but to obey her orders.

When he arrived at the location, his phone suddenly rang, but it hung up before he could even answer it. As he scanned the surroundings, he immediately noticed a girl in the distance. With that, he marched over and tapped her on the shoulder.

“What’s up?” Harvey was amused to see the girl shrink back like a frightened animal.

Am I that scary?

Chuckling softly, he asked, “You gave me a call just now, didn’t you? Let’s go. Arielle is still waiting for you.”

At first, he thought the girl would follow him obediently.

Surprisingly, the girl denied, “No, I didn’t call you. You’ve mistaken me for someone else.”

Seeing the girl was about to run away, he dialed the unknown number earlier, which immediately caused the girl’s phone to ring. He glared at her, feeling utterly displeased.

Arielle’s identity is about to be exposed, and this girl’s still dawdling as if she doesn’t care.

“Why are you denying it?”

“I suddenly remembered I have something to do, so I don’t want to disturb her,” the girl blurted and attempted to flee.

Unfortunately, Harvey caught her, but his eyes widened in shock when he saw her face clearly.

“You...”

Isn't she the girl I had sex with that night after getting drunk?

I've been sending people out to look for her, but she was never found. I can't believe I actually met her here.

Wait a minute! She's here for an abortion?

Harvey pulled her into his arms and muttered into her ear, "The child in your belly is mine, isn't it?"

He was not asking a question but declaring a fact. He had never imagined the girl he had searched high and low for was actually Arielle's friend. It seemed as if Lady Luck was on his side.

At that moment, he felt thankful that he still came even though he was upset about how Arielle was willing to risk being exposed to pick up her friend. Otherwise, he would not have found the girl.

The second the girl heard his words, her expression changed, and she denied immediately, "What child? I don't know what you're talking about."

She even wanted to free herself from his arms. Seeing that, Harvey knew the girl was not ready.

He softened his tone, saying, "I know it was my fault that night. Can we please talk about it?"

Truth be told, he never expected the girl to be pregnant with his child after that one night. Regardless, the idea of her carrying his child in her belly did not disgust him. Instead, he even looked forward to it.

Could I have developed feelings for her after staring at her picture in the pendant every day?

Since she did not reply, Harvey narrowed his eyes and said after some thought, "Why don't we go and see Arielle first?"

In truth, he hoped that Arielle would convince the girl to keep the child. After all, it was his first child—a life he cherished and did not want to give up on.

Even so, he would respect the girl's wishes to abort the child, albeit sadly and reluctantly.

The girl thought for a moment before nodding at him.

Harvey was relieved to see her nod and complimented himself for coming up with an idea to make her stay. With that in mind, he reached out to hold her hand, but she flung it away.

Puzzled, he glanced at her only to find her cheeks flushed.

“I can walk on my own,” she said.

It was at that moment he realized his actions made her feel shy. “All right. Be careful then.”

With that said, he went to the front to lead the way. At the same time, he could not help but smile whenever he thought of how the girl was pregnant with his child. He did not know if he would feel the same if he had slept with a different girl that night, but he would be very excited if this girl would give birth to his child.

At that thought, he could not help but turn around to look at her.

To his surprise, the girl immediately patted her face, which made him ask, “What’s wrong?”

“Nothing. I felt some weird sensation on my face.”

Hearing that, Harvey quickly went over and tilted her face up to study it before she could even react.

“There seems to be nothing wrong with your face. We can get Arielle to check it when we’re back.”

With Arielle around, there was no need to go to a hospital.

When Harvey did not hear any reply from the girl, he lowered his gaze and met her eyes, which were fixated on him. It made his heart skip a beat. He badly wanted to kiss her, but he feared it would frighten her.

Unwilling to tear his eyes away from her, they continued gazing at each other until a ringtone sounded, which snapped them back into reality. Harvey hurriedly released her hand, and she fumbled through her bag for her phone.

Her face fell as soon as she saw the caller’s name. Noticing that, Harvey narrowed his eyes, but she quickly hung up and placed the phone in her bag before he could guess who the caller was.

Though he was worried for her, he did not ask about it. Along the way, he stole glances at the passenger seat to find her leaning her head against the car window, looking as though something was bugging her. He parted his lips to say something but remained silent nonetheless because he did not know what to say.

Even though they had once slept together, and she was pregnant with his child, they were not on close terms. Thus, he felt it was inappropriate for him to ask about her private matters. In fact, asking her such questions might only scare her off.

Upon arriving at the apartment, he sent the girl to Arielle's room and headed out.

When he returned with a glass of water, he suddenly heard Arielle asking the girl, "What's your plan? Do you want to deliver this child?"

Immediately, he stopped in his tracks because he wanted to find out what the girl's answer was.

"I... I don't know, either."

Her answer was a relief to Harvey. The fact that she did not insist on aborting the child proved that she had thought of keeping it.

"Sonia, please think carefully. If you don't want it, then you should abort it as soon as possible. It's better for your body that way as you'll recover faster."

Harvey's heart sank when he heard Arielle's words. He was truly worried that Sonia would go with the abortion.

"I've thought of keeping the baby before, but that was just a fleeting thought," Sonia mumbled.

Pausing momentarily, she continued, "But I don't have the courage to keep the baby. I don't know if I can bear the consequences after giving birth to the child. Not only is it tough being a single mother, but I'm also not sure if I can provide the child with a comfortable life. Why should I take the risk if I can't do so? I don't want the child to suffer with me."
