Daily Life in the Base: Green Titans (2)

As the overall chief instructor that Xiye employed on behalf of his green titans, these skill training instructors had to give Zanda a detailed report of the students' progress every day, and he also had to provide basic training to the specialization each student chose.

For those that specialized in the berserker route, the main thing was to strengthen the development of their cell activity. They had to do more anaerobic exercises, high-pressure exercises, endurance training, and qi and blood strengthening training. For players of this category, they lacked meat the most. Xiye had once seen an eleventh-grade green titan that specialized in this path. Every day, that green titan needed to eat a fifth-grade Stardevil Rhino, one of the trump cards of a certain arena boss. It was said that just for the meals of that green titan alone, the overlord had to spend over millions of deity dollars every day.

However, this type of titan was the best to train. There was no need to worry about their body shape or muscle growth. On the contrary, titans specializing in weapons or combat were more troublesome to train.

You had to pay attention to their muscle lines at every moment. They had to have the eruption power of warriors, yet they couldn't lose their agility. In addition, for all green titans that specialized in weaponry, they would have different basic training depending on what weapon they wanted to specialize in.

For those who specialized in combat, they first had to train their abdominal muscles to strengthen their core. The core muscles were the source of eruptive might for warriors and martial artists, providing balance and stability. They then had to strengthen the muscles near their spine and increase their back stretching to strengthen their core. This would strengthen some of their moves such as high kicks and leg sweeps. The deltoid and latissimus dorsi would guarantee the speed and strength of their punches. They also had to gain a certain degree of control with regards to other muscles like their chest muscles to prevent their agility when unleashing punches to be affected.

It was the same for those who specialized in weaponry. Each different weapon had very precise requirements for the growth of their different corresponding muscle groups. Green titans were a race that had a very fast growth rate. If one didn't establish their foundation properly when they were starting out, their muscle lines and muscle growth in the wrong areas might affect their future development greatly. As the chief instructor, Zanda had to know the situation of each student from the instructors. According to his analysis, he would then come up with the next step of muscle training. A humanoid body was like a precise weapon. Science and knowledge were needed for each movement to be accurate to the extreme.

When he heard the overlord asking for the information of his most outstanding students, as someone who was closely observing the growth of this bunch of little dolls daily, the required data soon floated up in his mind.

Although the brain development of green titans couldn't be compared to pure mental-type races, as an eighth-grade lifeform, Zanda's brain development would at least be able to reach the fourth-grade standard. Let alone the data of these few thousand green titans, even if there were hundreds of thousands of them, he would still be able to remember them clearly.

Zanda soon managed to provide the information on the top 15 green titan players for Xiye.

Five of them specialized in the berserker route, and they were 'Fairy Maiden Smelly Feet', 'Collapsing Integrity', 'Bluesoar Old Driver', 'Wanton Unrestrained Leghair', and 'Ouch damn, you are happiness, young man'. After reading the language bank of this planet, Zanda felt that these people were very strange. He couldn't help but wonder why their parents gave them such casual names.

Next, four of the top green titan players had chosen the way of the spear as their specialization. For this point, Zanda was somewhat speechless. It was like the indigenous people loved spears a lot. Clearly, spears were the toughest to train among cold weapons, and it had always been a cold subject for warriors of the Cosmos Federation. Thus, he didn't expect the spear to be so popular here. This caused the spear instructor Helsing to be overwhelmed by the players. As one of the most popular instructors, his time table every day was fully stacked.

The other four green titan players specialized in battle axes and broadswords, and the last two specialized in combat. The other light-weighted specializations such as longsword, bow, sickle, and daggers weren't very popular. Naturally, there wouldn't be many geniuses produced. But this was also very normal. Green titans were a strength-type race. Even if they chose to go the path of a weapons master, they would prefer the usage of heavy weapons. Weapons like longswords and bows were more suited for those agile races.

For instructors of these specializations, Xiye would keep them for the elf balls that had successfully established their forms. But for now, there didn't seem to be any elf players who had successfully taken form yet. Later on, he needed to visit the elf instructors and check on the elf players' progress.

For the spear specialization, the number one player was naturally none other than Liver King. It wasn't that his aptitude was good. Rather, it was because he had the most contribution points and he was willing to work hard. The amount of time he had spent on training far surpassed others. Hence, he was now temporarily ranked first in all aspects.

The second ranker was a player named Coldstar. Before this, this player was not even in the top 30 of the ranking board at all. But Zanda gave him a very high evaluation in the comprehensive evaluation. This player was very intelligent and improved extremely quickly. In other words, using ancient sayings, it meant that his comprehension abilities were monstrous, and he managed to climb to the second place just by his natural talent. The amount of time he was online per day was even less than 5 hours.

Hence...being outstanding and working hard at mining...there really wasn't much connection...

The one in third place was a player named 'G, you are too beautiful'. He could be considered a somewhat more active player, but he was different from Liver King. Zanda also gave this fellow a very high evaluation, but his flaw was that his willpower was weak and he lost focus easily. It was unknown why this was so.

Xiye nodded upon hearing this. The A.I. had given him this data before as well. Simply speaking, this player masturbated too much which caused his ability to focus to weaken. Many otakus suffered from the same problem, but they would be able to recover after a while. When he thought of this, Xiye also put his name into the mission list.

The player ranked 4th: Male Dog Waist. The evaluation Zanda gave this man was two times more lengthy compared to the others. Firstly, he praised the comprehension of this player highly, almost on the same level as Coldstar. But his ability to listen to orders was very bad. He would resist basic training and frequently doubted the teaching arrangements of the instructors.

Xiye felt puzzled upon hearing this. He read through the information and curiously asked, "But when I observed, he seemed to be quite cooperative with his training? How did you guys make this happen?"

Zanda coldly laughed. "We gave him a severe beating..."

Xiye: "..."

After hearing the evaluation, Xiye decided to place this player into the observation list. Although his basic ability and other aspects fulfilled the requirements of the upcoming mission, his personality might easily cause unexpected things to happen during the mission. For this point, Xiye had to personally verify it.

If there was a more suitable player to replace him, Xiye planned to remove him from the list.

As for the remaining players in other specializations, their evaluation was very normal and was considered of average standard (compared to those of the same race). But because their accumulation points were high, the amount of training time they had was also plenty, which caused them to be slightly more outstanding than others.

Xiye also prepared to observe them further. If he discovered more suitable players later on, he would replace them.

For those that specialized in the berserker route, it required more natural talent. Hence, those who could rank among the top would all have pretty good aptitudes. But what Xiye didn't expect was that the most outstanding one was the Fairy Maiden fellow. In reality, she was just a little loli about 150+ cm tall. He didn't expect her talent in berserking to be so good. Could it be true that lolis all had hearts of violence?

Lastly, Xiye felt that for this mission, one or two archers would be needed. It seemed like he had to go over to the elf area and check things out later on!
