

Chapter 49

Iris was washing the dishes when her phone suddenly rang. She wiped her hands and answered the call.

"Iris," Mike's voice came through, sounding nervous and anxious.

"What's the matter?" Iris' tone towards Mike had softened now that she knew it was Yvonne who had abandoned Mike.

"Are you at home?" he asked.

"Yes," Iris replied.

"Do you... do you know where your husband is?" Mike asked. He was unaware that Iris and Stanley had already divorced as Yvonne didn't bother informing him.

He didn't know how he should tell Iris about Stanley's infidelity.

Iris seemed to have guessed something. "Did you see him?"

There was a moment of hesitation on Mike's end before he replied, "... Yes. He... he..."

Iris was Yvonne's best friend, so Mike decided he must tell her the truth. "I'll send you a video; you can see for yourself." He quickly hung up, took a video of Stanley, and sent it to Iris.

Iris opened the video and saw Stanley kissing a woman on the street, their lips tightly pressed together.

She replied emotionlessly: [We're already divorced. You don't have to tell me about this kind of thing anymore.]

She set her phone down and went back to washing the dishes.

Mike stared at the message in shock. He had heard from Yvonne that Iris and Stanley had been together since college; it was true love. Yvonne had claimed that even if the earth exploded, their love would remain unchanged.

And now, they were divorced?

What had he missed?

He quickly texted: [Is it because your husband cheated?]

However, he received no reply.

When he looked back up, Stanley and Fiora were gone.

Iris was unconcerned with who Stanley was with or who he kissed anymore. She only wanted to focus on her career and be successful.

And she soon received another case.

The client from the other day came to see her again. This time, it was for divorce.

She sought to divorce her husband, who had cheated on her. She was clever enough to gather evidence of his infidelity.

Her only demand was: "I want the majority of the assets."

She had a lot of faith in Iris by now. She thought Iris was a very capable lawyer.

"I thought I could overlook it, but every time I see his face, I'm reminded of those disgusting images of him with that woman. I have no choice but to divorce him," the woman explained.

Chapter 49

Initially, she hadn't wanted a divorce, but she eventually realized she couldn't live with him anymore. Just seeing him brought back memories of the homewrecker sucking him. It was unbearable.

"A cheating man is like money that fell on poop – it's a waste if you don't pick it back up, but if you do, it's disgusting. Ultimately, to avoid the disgust, you have to let it go," she said.

Iris completely understood the woman's feelings. She knew what the woman wanted. "Let's work together to secure the best outcome for you," she said.

The woman nodded vigorously. "I trust you. Here's the evidence of my husband's infidelity, and these are our marital properties..."

"What does your husband think?" Iris inquired.

To secure the most property in the divorce, it was essential to understand the husband's stance.

Even though he was at fault – something that would work in their favor – it was impossible to take everything from him.

"He doesn't want divorce; he's been trying to win me back," the woman responded.

"Is he trying to win you back, or is he buying time to transfer assets away?" Iris asked.

The woman was taken aback.

Chapter 49

"If he's sincere, then tell him to sign a nuptial agreement," Iris advised. "Don't trust any verbal promises; actions speak louder than words. If he wants to prove his loyalty, have him sign a nuptial agreement. You must seize the chance and take control of the finances."

SURPRISE GIFT: 100 BONUS FREE FOR YOU

 GET IT

Comments

Support