Starting with A Divorce Chapter 16-She Has Done So Much for Him

Lainey thought about it and concluded, “Good for you.

Ainsley knew that Lainey was unhappy, so Ainsley just quietly watched it and couldn’t help but laugh after hearing this.

Cason frowned. “My mother chased you out. Are you sick?”

Was Cason acting concerned about Ainsley at this time?

Ainsley looked at the door of the bureau and felt a bit of ridicule in her heart.

Her expression was indifferent as Ainsley looked at him. “Yes, so Mr. Baldry, please finish the procedures as soon as possible so as not to cause any misunderstanding.”

After Ainsley finished speaking, she pulled Lainey away and did not give Cason any chance to say anything more.

As soon as Ainsley left, Cason called Kaliyah and asked about what happened yesterday.

Kaliyah sounded a little helpless. “Originally, I wanted Ms. Easton to stay, but Lindsay seemed to be at odds with her, so I asked someone to drive her away.”

For some reason, Cason felt uncomfortable listening to her words and interrupted her lightly, “Kaliyah, that house was indeed given to her by me.”

Ainsley did not know what Cason had said to Kaliyah. Ainsley checked her phone and saw Roman’s messages.

“Miss, can you accept 500 dollars?

“400 dollars can do!

“Miss?

“Hello?

“Money really isn’t a problem!”

Ainsley was speechless.

In the Gage's house.

Roman looked at his phone. "Mr. Gage, what if Ms. Easton ignores me? I've already lowered it to 400 dollars! Is it still expensive?"

Manuel fiddled with the roses. His tone was calm. "Don't worry."

Roman leaned over and looked at Manuel suspiciously. Holding his cheek, Roman couldn't help but ask, "Mr. Gage, what are you thinking? It's your house. You can just give it to Ms. Easton openly. Why do you still insist on saying it's mine? Even if you like her, you don't have to hide it."

Manuel glanced at him and cut off the excess leaves. "You won't understand."

Roman couldn't help but mutter, "I don't understand, but Ms. Easton has been married before. I didn't expect you to like a divorced woman..."

Before Roman could finish speaking, his feet stumbled and he almost fell to the ground.

Roman raised his head in grief and saw Manuel wipe his hands clean and pass by him, lazily saying,

"You talk too much."

Roman stood still in shock, and Ainsley sent him a message..

"Mr. Heyman, thank you for your kindness. Just give me the market price. When it is convenient for you, we will go to see the house."

Roman looked at Manuel awkwardly and handed the phone to him. "Mr. Gage, Ms. Easton said that she wants to rent it at the market price..."

Manuel said with a rare smile, "Then do as she says."

At night.

In a bar.

Cason was having fun with a bunch of friends.

Cason didn't say much, only drinking wine in a low mood.

The friends didn't dare to go forward and only discussed it together, "Cason really went to divorce?"

Does that mean that Kaliyah and Cason are getting married?"

"That goes without saying. I heard that Kaliyah's father and the others are also here."

"It's good that Cason and Kaliyah are together. That Ainsley is not very good. She has a low education background and is an orphan."

"You can't say that. Back then, when Cason was at his lowest point, Ainsley did a lot. Didn't Ainsley find a few projects for Cason then?"

Hearing this, Cason suddenly raised his head. "What did you say?"

Cason's reaction gave everyone a fright. That man hesitated and explained, "Not long after Kaliyah left, Cason, didn't you become depressed for a long time because of Kaliyah? The higher-ups of the company all had complaints about you till several projects came up. I heard from my father that several of them were acquired by Ainsley as your wife. She was afraid that you would be unhappy, so Ainsley never said it."

Ainsley did not have a high education, and she did not understand these things. She also used the identity of "Mrs. Baldry", which Cason hated the most. Even if Ainsley got those projects, she was afraid that Cason would not accept them, so she chose to hide them from him.

Cason was unaware of it until three years later.

Cason sat in the shadows, his eyes passing over her expression today. His heart suddenly throbbed painfully.

That night, when Cason arrived home, Kaliyah was sitting on the sofa and talking to Lindsay. They were happy and harmonious, looking very intimate.

Seeing him return, Lindsay greeted him warmly, "Cason, come here. I am discussing the wedding with Kaliyah. Kaliyah said that many people are now having traditional weddings..."

say!

"Mom, leave us alone. I have something to Kaliyah."

"Okay. You guys chat. I won't disturb you."

Lindsay smiled and went upstairs. The smell of alcohol on Cason's body was a little heavy. The housekeeper poured tea for him and left. Cason took a sip of tea before looking at Kaliyah. He hesitated for a while. "Kaliyah, how about I buy your parents a house?"

Kaliyah was stunned. She sat down next to him and bit her lip, feeling a little embarrassed. "I'm sorry, Cason, I didn't know that the house belonged to Ms. Easton, which caused a misunderstanding. It was just that Lindsay and my parents were unhappy because of this matter. If they moved out now, they would be unhappy and would misunderstand you and Ms. Easton."

Her eyes reddened. Cason looked at her jade-like skin, and her slightly wet eyes looked more and more delicate.

His heart softened and he pulled her into his arms. Cason said gently, "What about a few days later? Ainsley won't mind."

Kaliyah nodded meekly, but her eyes were dark and unclear.

However, Kaliyah did not expect that before Cason took the initiative to mention the house, Ainsley directly slapped Kaliyah in the face.

After discussing the price with Roman, Ainsley went to see the house. It was upstairs in Serina's house. The house was decorated very well. Ainsley only needed to move in and buy some supplies.

When Ainsley finished moving home and went to apply for her job, she received a call from the notary office. The real estate properties that Cason had given her had all been under her name.

After getting the documents, she called the security department.

After a while, the security guards knocked on the door of the villa and drove Kaliyah's parents out of the house.

Becky looked at the security guards incredulously. "What do you mean? Why did you kick us out?"

The security guards were impatient. "Sorry, this is the owner's intention. If the two of you don't leave, we will call the police."

“The owner?” Becky was furious. “Do you know the relationship between the owner and us? This is the house of my future son-in-law!”

Seeing that she was stubborn, the guards simply threw her luggage out. Becky struggled unwillingly, and her original appearance of a rich lady became fierce and shrewish, attracting the strange gazes of others.

Becky was angry and called Kaliyah. Only then did they know that the house was under Ainsley’s name.

Kaliyah arranged a hotel for her parents while comforting them, “Mom, since this house is given to Ainsley, I’ll let Cason buy a house for you.”

“What nonsense are you talking about? Why did he give this house to his ex-wife? Who does he think you are?”

“Mom, Cason just pitied her. I heard that she didn’t have a job and her education was low. Cason wanted to divorce her quickly, so he gave her more so that she would be willing to leave.”

Becky frowned coldly and doubted, “That won’t do! I have to talk to his family about this. Cason can’t still be interested in her, can he?”

Kaliyah smiled with a sweet expression. “Mom, what are you talking about? How could Cason like her? He never touched Ainsley and waited for me for three years.”

“That’s more like it. But don’t worry about this house. I will settle it for you.”

After hanging Kaliyah up, Becky called Lindsay.

When Lindsay heard this, she was stunned.

She couldn’t believe that her son had given the house to that little . Ainsley hadn’t even given birth to a child, so what right did Ainsley have to take away their house?

Lindsay was just about to call Ainsley when she found that her phone had been blocked.

Lindsay couldn’t find Ainsley, and she didn’t dare to ask Cason. She was afraid that Cason would find out that there was a misunderstanding with Kaliyah, so things were delayed for a few days.

During this period of time, Ainsley stayed in the house she rented and picked up the knowledge about psychology that she had forgotten.

On Monday, Ainsley went to the Psychological Counseling Room and found that there were not many students who consulted at the university psychological center. She had never seen the child of the Gage family.

On the contrary, some relevant clubs would come to Ainsley from time to time to have activities. Many people gradually heard that a beautiful teacher came to the psychological center.

Ainsley was happy and idle. She returned to the state when she was in college, reading books and chatting with students.

Coincidentally, on this day, the students of the psychological club had activities and specially came to ask Ainsley for help. After consulting the relevant knowledge, she received a call from Roman.

“Ms. Easton, have you finished moving home? Are you free today? I brought someone to celebrate!”

Ainsley had a much better impression of Roman. In addition, she did owe him a favor, so Ainsley agreed. She took a detour on her way to the canteen to leave the school, and she went straight to the supermarket.

After she left, Kaitlin, who was not far away, wiped her eyes. She could not believe what she had seen.

Kaitlin called Lindsay in surprise and said, “Mom, do you know who I saw in my school? Ainsley! Ainsley is actually in my school! What is she doing at our school?”
