Chapter 561 Bunny Girls

It seemed that they were over, but Anne gave birth to Dante's child. It seemed that they were not over, but they were divorced.

The child was the bond between Anne and Dante. Dante looked unrestrained, but he was actually responsible.

Anne had just given birth. Coupled with the guilt he had been feeling during this period, Dante would definitely find a way to make it up to Anne.

As for the child, once the Paltrow family found out, they would get the child by any means.

Dante saw the bar and got out of the car, rushing inside with Chandler.

Seeing that he was distraught, Chandler drank two drinks with him.

But Dante could tell that Chandler was absent-minded.

Chandler was sitting here, but his mind had already flown away.

Dante waved his hand at Chandler and said, "Well. Find a designated driver to take you home. Let me be alone for a while."

Chandler was indeed thinking about Meryl.

They finally met each other, but they hadn't spent any time together properly today.

But Dante was his friend, after all. He didn't want to leave Dante alone.

Chandler said, "Forget it. I'll accompany you today!"

"You're not a woman. I don't need you to accompany me," said

Dante.

Dante picked up the cocktail on the table, waved to Jason Wood, the manager, and whispered something in Jason's ear.

Within two minutes, Jason entered the box again with several scantily clad women.

Chandler frowned, looking at Dante, "What are you doing?"

Dante said, "We're divorced, and she has another man. Can't I have another woman?"

He was too stimulated today, and he had drunk too much, so his mind was not clear.

Chandler frowned and asked Jason to take all the women away.

Dante stopped him. "Chandler, you have a family. Just go back home. I'm alone. I'm different from you. Let them stay here with me for a while."

Chandler looked at Dante with disappointment in his eyes.

Those women were about to get close to them with a smile but were frightened by Chandler's look.

So, all the women went to Dante's side.

Dante leaned on the leather sofa, accepting drinks from the bunny girls. But his smile was extremely bitter.

He pulled out a stack of cash and slapped it on the table.

"Whoever of you can make me forget her tonight will have all these money!"

A woman sensed something and asked, "Mr. Paltrow, are you hurt by your relationship? The best way to heal a relationship is to start a new one."

Dante turned to look at the woman who had spoken.

Unexpectedly, she looked somewhat similar to Anne, especially her profile.

At this moment, she was holding the glass and putting it to Dante's lips. Dante looked a little dazed. He reached out to pull her to his side and said, "Anne?"

The woman was stunned, and she caught sight of the cash on the table. She became excited, and her eyes were filled with greed.

She nodded and said quickly, "Mr. Paltrow, do you want me to serve you tonight?"

With that, she pushed aside the other women and got closer to Dante.

Leaning in his arms, she hugged Dante's waist and said with a blushing face, "There is a room upstairs. Take me up, okay?"

Dante lit a cigarette and took two puffs.

The woman had a very cheap and pungent smell of perfume on her body, which was utterly different from Anne's sweet and soft scent.

Dante lost his interest.

Chandler suddenly asked, "Who are you insulting by calling her Anne?"

With that, Chandler raised his cell phone and pressed the speaker button.

"Hello, is this 911? Someone here is suspected of prostitution. The address is..."

Before Chandler could finish, the bunny girls in the room suddenly panicked and turned to run away without even looking back.

The box suddenly became quiet. Jason got the news and ran in hurriedly, smiling flatteringly to Chandler.

“Mr. Aniston, how did I offend you? Why did you do that?”
