Chapter 1322 How Good Will You Be to Me?

It seemed that Selena had completely forgotten about it...

But while Selena had forgotten, everyone else still remembered. Rumors must have been spreading outside by now. If Selena found out what she had done while drunk...

Leia was struggling with whether or not to explain the situation and try to make amends when Selena, who had not found Osvaldo, spoke first. "Where is Young Master?"

It was late at night, and no one had gone to bed. Osvaldo was nowhere to be found. It was definitely abnormal.

But despite the strange expressions on everyone's faces, there was no sense of danger or panic. Selena didn't think much of it.

The butler said, "Young Master went out for something and instructed us to call him immediately when you woke up."

The butler picked up the phone before Selena could object.

Selena couldn't help but laugh. She had wanted to say it wasn't necessary, but when she turned her head and saw the dark rainy night outside, she changed her mind.

After the butler hung up the phone, Selena said, "I'll wait for Young Master to come back here. Everyone else can rest."

Naturally, the people in the castle wouldn't be so clueless as to stay behind and be a third wheel while the mistress waited for the master to return home. Once they made sure Selena didn't need anything else, they all went back to their rooms to rest.

During the lull while waiting for Osvaldo to return, Selena practiced sword fighting against simulated images on the computer.

When Osvaldo walked in, he saw a room full of cold glinting blades. Through the sea of sword images, he saw the girl with black hair and fierce eyes.

He raised his hand and pressed a switch by the door.

In an instant, all the images disappeared like a tide, leaving only the sweaty figure of the girl in the spacious training room.

Selena was startled and turned her head to see the man leaning against the door, looking at her.

She smiled, "You're back."

Osvaldo walked over, his deep eyes fixed on her. Selena was a bit surprised by his strange gaze.

She couldn't see the problem and lowered her head to look at herself. She had just finished sweating, and her hair was a mess. She looked quite disheveled.

But Osvaldo has seen her in a worse state before... he shouldn't mind...

Selena bit her lip.

As if understanding her doubts, Osvaldo suddenly lifted his hand and gently smoothed down her sweaty forehead. "It's not good for your health to stay up late practicing. Don't come here at night anymore."

Selena blinked. "I slept too much today..."

At that moment, a question suddenly popped into Selena's mind.

When did she fall asleep?

She thought about it carefully but couldn't remember exactly when she fell asleep. All she remembered was going to the Anderson family to celebrate the old man's birthday, giving him a gift... and then nothing.

Selena widened her eyes slightly. Osvaldo's long, fair fingers gently brushed over her brows, and he smiled. "It's okay."

With that, he took the knife from Selena's hand and threw it aside, taking her hand and leading her outside.

As soon as they stepped out the door, the wind and rain in the darkness attacked them.

Selena looked at the man's slender figure.

He walked in front of her, holding her hand tightly, while holding an umbrella in his other hand to protect her from getting wet.

The cold wind and rain hit them head-on, but the figure in front of her blocked it all.

Behind him, Selena saw the man's gentle and handsome profile and suddenly felt warm and reassured.

Selena smiled slightly and spoke in a low voice in the darkness. "Osvaldo."

"Yes?"

"You have to be good to me from now on."

"Okay."

A few seconds later, her slightly curious voice came from the darkness again. "How good will you be to me?"

Selena had never been in love before, and was still ignorant about relationships. She didn't know what it was like for normal couples to get along.

But she knew that Osvaldo was a very good boyfriend, and if they got engaged and married successfully... he would definitely be a qualified husband.

Osvaldo's footsteps suddenly stopped, and he turned around to look at she behind him, who was staring at him in amazement.

Osvaldo lifted his slender fingers and gently caressed her cheek. His deep and eerie black eyes fixed on her face as he spoke softly with a smile, "If you die, I will go and be with you."

Selena's dark eyes widened in shock as the man leaned down and lightly kissed her forehead with his cold lips. "Wherever you go in the future, I will be with you," he said.

Even if they both died in the future, they would need only one empty coffin to bury the two of them together.

That way, even if they ended up in hell, he could continue to be with her and protect her.

He had already let her die alone once, and he would never let the same misfortune befall her again. If he wasn't by her side, what would happen if someone bullied her, hurt her, made her cry or scared her?

A shiver ran through Selena's heart, and she could barely look into those dark and beautiful eyes filled with emotions that were too hot and too fierce, making it hard for her to breathe.

"Osvaldo..." she whispered.

The man seemed to sense something and didn't say anything. He just held her hand tightly and continued to lead she back.

After returning Selena to her bedroom and putting her back to sleep, Osvaldo silently left the room again.

He hurried back to the dark abyss, afraid that his wife would suffer from insomnia at night.

Once he confirmed that she was safe, he turned around and returned to the empire filled with slaughter and bloodshed.

...

Selena slept until the morning.

The butler told her that Osvaldo had left in the morning, and she didn't notice anything wrong.

The rain had been falling all night and continued into the day. Since Osvaldo was not around, Selena remembered Oscar, who had just had surgery the day before, and ordered Leia to prepare the car to go back to the Turner family.

Patrick was also preparing to visit Selena. As he walked out the door, he met she coming back home and smiled, "Selena."

Selena got out of the back seat and followed Patrick into the hall. She asked, "How's Uncle doing?"

"Father has woken up, and the doctor says everything is normal. After a while, he can start some rehabilitation training," Patrick replied.

This was great news for everyone in the Turner family.

Patrick smiled even more than usual.

Selena also relaxed and instructed Patrick, "If Uncle has any problems, please let me know."

As he looked at the girl sitting on the sofa with a obedient expression, Patrick remembered what had happened yesterday and offered words of comfort...
