

Chapter 41

Angelina smiled.

What a righteous statement!

Wasn't it just another way of proving that Elena's words were true?

In their eyes, Angelina was arrogant and domineering, had a terrible taste in making friends, and lacked good manners.

However, Lilian was so great at embodying the perfect benevolent sister image. Lilian claimed that no matter how Angelina changed, she would always be her beloved sister.

Bullsh*t!

Shameless!

Angelina couldn't be bothered to talk to them. She turned back and continued to look at the matching watches. However, she saw from the corner of her eyes that the saleswoman was staring at her and Yvonne strangely.

Not getting a response, Elena was a little bored. However, when she saw the watches on display, she couldn't help but speak up.

"These watches are so beautiful! Lilian, didn't you say you needed a watch? Why don't you buy this pair and give the mens' watch to your guy friend or someone you like?"

Yvonne's mouth twitched, and she looked coldly at Elena.

"Are you blind? Didn't you see that Angel has already chosen these watches?"

Nevertheless...

As soon as Yvonne finished her words, Elena couldn't help but giggle.

"Quit joking, okay? These watches cost at least a few million dollars, and doesn't she only get a monthly allowance of around a hundred thousand dollars? How is she going to buy them? Are you going to buy them for her? You're just a manager, you don't have that much savings, do you?"

Elena's voice was loud and her words were crass, but her enunciation was exceptionally perfect. Everyone around could hear her clearly.

Lilian's expression shifted. She quickly pulled Elena's hand and said, "Elena, don't talk nonsense."

There was a little panic in her voice.

However, she was clearly putting on an act, making it obvious that Angelina couldn't afford it.

The corner of Angelina's mouth twitched, but before she could speak, Lilian looked at her with a smile.

"Angelina, do you really like this pair of watches? How about I buy them for you?"

Yvonne couldn't help rolling her eyes. Just as she was about to say something, Angelina grabbed her hand and looked at her strangely.

Elena sneered, "Well, I think you'd better not buy it for her. Even if you do, she'll probably give the men's watch to Mr. Weils anyway, and then..."

Lilian's expression couldn't hold up anymore. "Elena!" she yelled.

Her eyes were apparently filled with displeasure and a slight sense of unease.

Angelina raised her eyebrows. Tsk, tsk. It seemed they were putting in quite an effort just to smear her reputation.

Lilian looked a little torn. "Angelina, how about you not buy these matching watches? I'm afraid it might lead to a misunderstanding later. You can buy something else, and I'll give it to you, okay?"

She seemed to be incredibly worried about Angelina, showcasing her concern for her little sister while portraying herself as the perfect big sister.

Angelina, who seemed nothing but arrogant and domineering, was indeed quite a great contrast.

As for the saleswoman, she wouldn't have bothered with Angelina if it weren't for Lilian, who was wealthy.

Upon hearing Lilian's words, she quickly smiled and looked at Angelina.

"Yes, ma'am, we have many other beautiful watches here. They all arrived today and were personally designed by Master James himself as well. Would you like to have a look?"

Angelina glanced at the saleswoman and pointed to the couple's watch on the counter. "Wrap these up for me."

The saleswoman was put on the spot and glanced at Lilian. After all, she was the one paying.

Lilian was satisfied with being looked at in such a way; her eyes showed a hint of contentment. However her expression shifted into something else, looking anxious as she quickly grabbed Angelina's hand.

It was mainly because Angelina was staring at the watches, checking if there were any flaws on them. She wasn't paying attention to Lilian, and she didn't dodge it in time. She looked down at Lilian who was holding her hand, and felt a little disgusted.
