The Almighty Dragon General Chapter 5391-oel looked at his guests and said, "I know the person who claimed to be a disciple of Theognostos is you, Forty-nine. And you must be the Glacies' princess."

Qiyana clenched her fists, full of hostility toward Xoel.

Xoel said smilingly, "I can sense your murderous intentions, Princess.

Unfortunately, it's useless to kill me. I've already spread the information to the other Heavenly Secrets Pavilion branches. Still, they haven't seen you two in person, so they won't be able to recognize you two. For now, I'm the only person who knows about your identities. However, I'll be reporting it to the headquarters soon. They'll instantly distribute information about you to the different branches and sell it if anyone pays for it."

James' expression became solemn. The Heavenly Secrets Pavilion's capabilities had exceeded his expectations.

Xoel could tell James and Qiyana were worried, so he said smilingly, "There's no need to worry. The Four Ancient Races are the only people who would care about your information. They've always been prideful, so they'd rather use their intelligence network than purchase the information from us. Plus, your information is precious. We definitely won't sell it for scraps. The Four Ancient Races might not find paying so much resource for information about you worth it."

James looked at Qiyana and asked, "What should we do?"

Qiyana said, "The resources belong to you, so it's up to you. You owe me nothing, so I won't force you to do this."

James weighed it out in his mind. Then, he replied, "Deal. I'll give you all my resources for the information I need."

"You're not making the exchange with me, but the Heavenly Secrets Pavilion. I can't make the call on this matter, so I'll have to bring you to the headquarters.

When you have the time, come see me again. I'll bring you there directly," said Xoel.

James nodded lightly and said, 'Til give you everything except the Supremusse Sword and Supremusse Lotus.'

The Supremusse Sword and Supremusse Lotus were important to James, so he refused to hand them over. As for the other cultivation resources, he was willing to sacrifice them. After all, he could always collect more. He would be set for the rest of his journey if Qairo recovered.

"If you have news about Latrusse, please notify me," said James.

"Sure." Xoel nodded.

James and Qiyana turned around and left.

Xoel's smile gradually dropped, and his expression became solemn. After thinking for a while, he reported the matter back to the headquarters and waited for them to make a decision.

After leaving the Heavenly Secrets Pavilion, James looked at Qiyana and asked, "How is their intelligence network so terrifying?"

Qiyana nodded and said, "It's rumored they know everything about the Dark World and the outside planes. I didn't believe it in the past, but it seems the rumors about them were true."

"It's no wonder the Heavenly Secrets Pavilion's Master had the guts to call himself the Dark World's Lord. With such a terrifying intelligence network, he holds the secrets of every race in his hands. Who would dare disapprove him as the Dark World's Lord?" James sighed.

The person in charge of the branch had so much information. Even though it was their first encounter, he easily discovered their identities and plans after a brief conversation.

Although James was the Lord Supremus in his previous life, their capabilities still shocked him.

Qiyana looked at James and asked, "Are you really willing to hand out so many resources?"

James nodded and said, “Yeah. It’s a hefty sum, but I can always find a way to collect more. Qairo will be useful to me, so I need to help him recover as soon as possible.”

The Almighty Dragon General Chapter 5392—the Heavenly Secrets Pavilion had information about the Elemental Primevals.

Although their asking price was outrageous, James did not hesitate to purchase the information.

He planned to obtain the Flamma Race’s primitive inscriptions first. Then, he would return to see Xoel and head to their headquarters to get the primitive inscriptions of the Tellures, Silvae, and Metalla.

James and Qiyana returned to their residence and patiently waited for Latrusse to arrive. Once the Flammaes’ attention was on Latrusse, they could easily achieve their goal.

Three thousand years later, Xoel appeared at James’ residence.

Xoel sat in the main hall of the building atop the spiritual mountain with crossed legs. He looked at James and said smilingly, “I’ve just received news that Latrusse has arrived in the Flammae’s territory. He reached an agreement with the Flammae. Three years later, he’ll go through nine trials. After he completes the nine trials, he’ll enter the Flamma Holy Land. There, he will go through the last trial. He can leave with the Flammae’s Saintess if he can complete the trials.” “He’s finally here.” James was excited.

Xoel smiled and said, “You shouldn’t be too happy. Although Latrusse has shown up, he chooses not to directly confront the Flammae.

Instead, he accepted going through the trials. Thus, there won’t be any chaos like you were expecting. It’ll be impossible for you to use him as a distraction to acquire the Flammae’s primitive inscriptions.”

James looked at him and asked, “Is there anything you can do?”

Xoel rubbed his chin pensively and murmured, “Naturally, I have a way.

However, there’s a condition.”

“Hmm?” James looked at him and said, “Enlighten me.”

Xoel said relaxedly, “The Heavenly Secrets Pavilion would like the Tressencia Completare Art. If you hand it over, you’ll become our permanent VIP. We’ll provide you with whatever information you want for free.”

“Haha. Really? Just a Supernatural Power is enough to get the Heavenly Secrets Pavilion to serve me forever?” James chuckled.

Xoel replied, “Your Tressencia Completare Art is terrifying. Its powers were limited in the Central Plane, which prevented you from using its full potential. However, your Tressencia Completare Art became a sensation after you displayed it in the Yefteros’ arena.

Even we have no idea where your Supernatural Power came from. Thus, we concluded you must be the creator. The Heavenly Secrets Pavilion finds it a worthy deal.”

James smiled faintly and said, “Thank you for the compliment. I’d love nothing more than to accept your offer.

After all, I’d be able to learn about everything in the Dark World and the outside planes. Unfortunately, the Tressencia Completare Art can’t be taught. I cultivated it by chance. Nobody else can cultivate it even if I were to share how it was created.” Xoel’s brows furrowed. He thought awhile and said, “Then, let’s renegotiate this.

How about you explain Tressencia Completare Art to us, and in exchange, we’ll give you three opportunities to inquire about any kind of information. We’ll give you the information you want as long as we have it. Of course, this excludes the information about the primitive inscriptions of the Tellures, Silvae, and Metalla since we’ve already made a deal.”

James thought about it for a while and felt it was a good deal. He only had to give them a brief explanation about the Tressencia Completare Art, and then he would get three opportunities to ask for information. If he had known an influential member of the Tressencia Completare Art much earlier, he would not have needed to pay such a hefty sum for the primitive inscriptions of the Tellures, Silvae, and Metalla.

“Alright. But before the exchange, I have a question for you,” said James.

“You...” Xael chuckled and said, “Fine, what is it? It’ll be on the house, just this once.”

James asked, “Are the Elemental Primevals’ primitive inscriptions, or rather the Elemental Curses, capable of returning Qairo to normal?”

“Uhh...” After a brief hesitation, Xael replied, “I’m not very sure. I’ve seen from our records that the Elemental Primevals’ primitive inscriptions are compatible but also repel each other. If you were to acquire all five of the elements, a magical power would be born.

Perhaps you’ll be able to use it to help him recover.”
