Chapter 1016: Chapter 1015: A Hypocrite (part three)

"Do you need any help with the tea?" asked Leena as she forced a sweet smile. She realized that her fake smiles had become a necessity to her since she arrived at that place. The fake expression had helped her win over many of Kevin's relatives and friends. She couldn't tell if it was a good or a bad thing but she was almost getting used to it by now.

"No, I am good here. You may need to go upstairs to check on Kevin. He has also drunk a lot tonight." Shannon was very pleased to have Leena as her daughter-in-law and had no intention to keep it a secret. There had been a lot of guests earlier that agreed that Leena was not just exceptionally beautiful but also had a good personality. The only thing she regretted was not finding her daughter-in-law a suitable company during the event as there were only very few girls who attended. Claire could have been a good choice but they all knew that the two were not going along well.

"Okay, Mother." Speaking of Kevin, Leena was indeed a little worried about him. He went straight upstairs right after they sent all the guests out. He said he needed a shower. Thinking that he might be tired from socializing the whole night, Leena let him leave and chose to help her mother-in-law with cleaning the mess the party had left.

"It's been a long day. You must be tired. Take a warm bath, it helps you fall asleep." That was a tender reminder from Shannon as she wished for Claire to be half as good as Leena. She wouldn't need to worry about her finding a boyfriend if that was the case.

"Okay, good night, Mother." As she said this, Leena turned and walked briskly upstairs. She was indeed worn out after all the trips today.

Kevin's room was on the top floor. Thus, she needed to pass Claire's room to get there. In order not to draw any attention from her sister-in-law, Leena deliberately slowed down as she came closer to Claire's door. It was to her disappointment when she found that Claire was out in the corridor, stretching her leg. She was obviously blocking Leena's way.

"Do you want anything, Claire?" Leena pressed her lips nervously as she waited for an answer.

"I didn't expect you to be such a hypocrite, Leena. First, it's fake designer clothes. Then, it's fake painting for my father. Can't you just be real and accept who you are? I want to build a relationship with you but all your acts are making it too difficult." The girl was very upset. She couldn't believe that her father scolded her in public because of Leena.

Since she couldn't find a chance to confront Leena at the party, she waited until that moment to block her and get back at her.

"What do you mean by fake designer clothes and fake painting?" Confusion was all over Leena's face as she asked. She knew that Claire doubted the authenticity of the painting she gave to Nathan but she couldn't figure out what 'designer clothes' she was fusing about.

"Cut it out already! You know exactly what I mean. Let me give you a piece of advice. Don't buy those expensive clothes if you can't afford them. Wearing them doesn't make you rich, or a princess. Cinderella doesn't get to be a princess in real life. It is all illusions!" said Claire harshly. She had been meaning to vent all this on Leena the whole night. There was a moment she felt that Leena was a little cute when they ate at the street cart just this day. However, she had changed her mind after seeing Leena bring a fake painting to please her father. She disliked her even more. How could she be so vain?

Listen, Claire. About what you just accused me of, I can explain. The designer clothes you mentioned are my everyday clothes. I have been wearing the brand for many years. As for the painting, it is from my father's collections. I admit that I don't really know how much it is worth. And that's all. I just don't understand why you would call me a hypocrite," said Leena as she used everything in her to stay calm. A surge of bitterness suddenly swelled inside her heart as she thought of the situation she was in. Not only did she not have the basic respect from her younger sister-in-law, but she was getting constant criticism from her. What else could explain why Claire was blocking her way? This was sheer bullying! She couldn't stop herself from thinking that the girl was already out of the line.

"You know why I called you that. And please! Stop giving me any more of your lies," said Claire with a sneer. She then put her leg down from the rail and prepared to leave. It was late and she didn't want to keep Leena for too long in case her brother came down to look for her.

"Wait, Claire. Is it really that hard for you to get along with me?" Leena sighed with great resignation and shut her eyes. She had changed a lot since she went home with Kevin. She had matured a lot in just a span of overnight. She would have argued with Claire more if she hadn't tried very hard to control herself.

"Yes, very. Because I can't stand having the slightest connection with a hypocrite," replied Claire directly. She shook her hair for some drama effect, turned, and then went back to her room. She knew that she herself was vain. It was just that she didn't expect Leena to outstrip her in this respect.

Leena bit her lip in astonishment. Her sister-in-law's discrimination of her was just unbelievable. She even had the gut to call her a hypocrite! Her old self would never have imagined something like this to happen to her. As much as she felt hurt about the way Claire judged her, Leena also found the whole thing bizarrely hilarious.

Time seemed to have stopped as Leena processed what just happened. She was unable to think of anything to defend herself as Claire's words echoed inside her head. As if paralyzed, she just stood there, gazing off into space.

Chapter 1017: Chapter 1016: To The End Of Their Life (part one)

Leena went upstairs in haste and suddenly stopped outside the door. It was as if she wanted to escape from something horrible. She had never felt this frustrated and helpless her entire life.

Her small body leaned against the wall and looked outside the window. Her gaze focused on the national flag that was displayed on the top of the army base. However, the darkness had fallen and the flag also seemed dark in color.

Sometimes she couldn't help but wonder, what if she didn't choose to drink down her sorrow that night? She would probably never meet Kevin. They wouldn't get married and she would live a completely different life. Away from the complications and away from her complex feelings about him.

Kevin frowned as he watched Leena in silence. He had been standing there for a long time but Leena didn't even notice him. She was absent-mindedly looking out of the window. Was there anything outside that drew her attention and troubled her heart? How could she just ignore his presence? He didn't butt a word as he leaned his body against the door frame. He just remained quietly staring at her. It suddenly occurred to him that Leena had changed in so many ways. She could be smart, lively and active with her brother around. On the other hand, she seemed to have lost her spirit whenever she was with him. Now all he could do was wonder what made her change. Did those changes have anything to do with him? His mind asked.

"Leena," Kevin called gently at last. He decided to stop guessing and talked to his wife.

"Yeah! Have you taken your shower?" Leena collected herself, turned around, and looked at him confusedly.

"Yes. I was looking for you. I didn't expect to see you here alone and troubled. Why don't you just come inside and tell me what happened?" Leena felt embarrassed under his steady and intense gaze.

Nothing serious. I just found that the night here was charming. It is beautiful. I feel drawn to it," answered Leena. She realized that she had become accustomed to telling lies. Worse was that she wasn't blushing or having nerves attacks anymore whenever she made up stories. Had she already developed a bad habit of lying to her husband? The reality of herself getting used to lying to her husband made her panic. She was afraid that she might have picked a habit that could put their marriage at risk.

"Charming? I don't think so. There's nothing but darkness outside. You can't see anything, not even a shining star." Kevin pretended to believe what she said and also gazed out of the window.

"Tsk! All the stars are scared of you. They must be hiding somewhere." Leena said before bursting into laughter upon seeing Kevin's bewildered face. She didn't waste the opportunity of teasing him.

"Well, er, Am I that ugly and horrible? Those stars can't be scared of my face," answered Kevin amusedly. Then, he touched his face with his hand. Little did Leena know how much her simple laugh cheered him every time. Actually, he would do anything just to make her laugh.

Yes, they can. It's all your fault! Shouldn't you appear all the sudden, they could have stayed there." Leena looked at Kevin and found that his hair was still wet. She frowned and thought that his wet hair might get him sick.

"Should I ask for your forgiveness then?" The handsome man stepped closer to his wife. Just like what she did a moment ago, he also leaned his body against the wall and looked out of the window.

"Why should I forgive you? Are you going to do anything to compensate for your fault?" A wry smile showed on Leena's lips. She found it funny whenever Kevin attempted to crack a joke.

"Smart girl, don't say that easily. You know the consequences of doing that." Kevin looked at her wryly and lustfully.

"Well, You should be ashamed of yourself, mister." Leena blushed scarlet since she clearly knew what he meant by the term 'consequences'.

I have said nothing to feel ashamed of myself. Don't be silly." Kevin cocked his head while smiling. He knew that Leena wasn't that stupid to misunderstand what he meant.

"I'm in no mood to talk nonsense with you right now. Mom's making some tea downstairs. Why don't you drink some to sober you up?" Leena still believed that the man was heavily drunk, otherwise, he wouldn't be as mischievous as a naughty child. She wouldn't even blush by just staring at his face under normal circumstances.

"No, thanks. Now go inside. The bath's ready." Kevin held her hand and pulled her to their bathroom.

She wouldn't say it out loud but in reality, Leena liked how it felt every time they were holding hands. It never failed to make her feel both warm and secure.

She could imagine herself as the queen of the world whenever her husband was around. She even became a bit frustrated and disappointed when the man finally let her go. It was as if she had woken up from her beautiful dream.

Capital City was a bad place for Leena. It could be that she hadn't been accustomed to the life there or because of Claire's blatant hostility towards her. Regardless of the real reason, she still felt relieved after she took a hot bath.

On the other hand, Kevin was sitting on the big bed with his head lowered. The loneliness and sadness he saw on Leena's eyes earlier wouldn't let him feel at ease at all. That was the very first time that he saw her like that. However, there were also some accidental moments when he caught her looking like she was low-spirited. He felt sorry for his wife. She had always been the happy daughter of the Leng family but it was just not the same now that she was with his family. It was undeniable that Leena had undergone a lot of stress since they got married. She was brutally forced to grow up and mature. He had witnessed everything that happened to her and God knows how desperate he was to free her out of those pressures.

The husband and wife who were living in the same room had different feelings and thoughts deep down in their hearts. Regardless of what happened, they would still rise in the morning to see the morning light and live another day, be it for good or for bad. The next morning, Leena woke up early and found Kevin surprisingly sitting on the balcony with a cup of warm coffee in his hand. He was drinking his brew leisurely while reading the newspaper. He seemed to be in a good mood. It was something unusual since she was used to waking up alone knowing that he was somewhere else exercising.

Chapter 1018: Chapter 1017: To The End Of Their Life (part two)

"Why did you get up so early today? Now, put on some clothes, or else, you'll catch a cold," said Kevin in concern. He raised his head and was greeted by Leena's drowsy look. He immediately knew that Leena needed more sleep. She wasn't used to waking up this early back on S City after all.

"Didn't you go out to exercise today?" asked Leena confusedly as she remained standing there instead of putting on some clothes. Gracious! She was even on her bare feet!

"No, I prefer to take a day off today. I drank too much yesterday night. Go and put on your shoes, the floor is cold." Kevin stood up and faced Leena. The room they were living in wasn't as luxurious as the one they had in Grand Apartment. They didn't have their thick wool carpet here.

Alright," answered Leena. She went back to put on her cotton-padded shoes and a thick coat. She was about to turn around when a pair of strong arms embraced her from behind.

Why haven't you learned how to take care of yourself?" said Kevin accusingly. He couldn't help but frown upon feeling how cold Leena's tiny body was.

"I'm not cold." Her voice came out small as her heart skyrocketed. The nervousness and longing that engulfed her were similar to those who had when experiencing their first love.

"Don't lie to me. Your hands are cold. Since you woke up early, why don't you wash and dress? I'll take you to a happy place later." Kevin pushed her into the washroom. He rarely took a day off, thus, he had decided to enjoy some fun with his wife.

Are we going out again?" asked Leena in confusion. She practically felt that it was inconvenient to be living with Kevin's family. More so, with the frequent go-outs. She felt obliged to behave herself, be a good wife, and daughter-in-law.

Yes, we are. We got married even before we have the chance to date. So, we'd better have some good time today and just have a date. Come on, it's just the two of us." Kevin fondled her hair and felt lucky that they met that night, otherwise, he wouldn't have such a lovely wife.

"Will you buy red roses for me? Will you buy me romantic candlelight dinner?" asked Leena, tilting her head expectantly. She couldn't stop wondering about his plan. It wasn't every day that she heard Kevin ask for a few hours with her.

"I'll try to make you feel contented today no matter what your wish is," was the man's fond reply. The tenderness in Kevin's voice was so obvious and real that she could almost taste it in the air.

Twat! I want nothing from you," answered Leena timidly. She hurried to turn around in an attempt to hide her embarrassment. She would never admit to Kevin that she actually wanted a good sex life with him.

"Sweetie, you should never accuse me of being shameless again. I think you can also be shameless sometimes." Instead of walking away, Kevin leaned against the door and taunted Leena.

"Leave me alone. I'm gonna brush my teeth." His words brought a warm flush to Leena's face. She glowered at her husband and thought that his words were highly misleading.

"Fine. Go and brush your teeth. I won't interrupt you," answered Kevin and remained standing where he was. He had no intention of leaving his wife alone at all.

"Alright. You won. If you don't want to leave, then fine. I'll go," said Leena. She slammed the door shut and got the door locked as fast as possible.

Kevin was left speechless and shocked to see Leena respond this way. He had never behaved badly to his wife. How come she was back to putting up all her precautions against him?

It was already nine o'clock when they finished preparing for their date. The weather turned warm and sunny.

"Good morning, Major General, Leena. Are you going out?" asked Lee hastily. If he had guessed right, he would be in serious trouble.

"Yeah! We're gonna have a walk outside. You can take a day off, Lee. Enjoy this day with your friends," answered Kevin in a friendly tone. Kevin had an amiable disposition and wouldn't allow himself to talk like a bureaucrat.

"Claire told me that you wouldn't use the car today so she drove your car away," said Lee as he looked both flustered and embarrassed. At the time, he also took a step back just in case Kevin became furious and kicked him.

What? I never said that. Awful girl! She is getting bolder and bolder," yelled Kevin. He gritted his teeth. Since his car was gone, he might have to borrow his father's military vehicle. The bad part, doing so would be like him signing himself up for a ton of trouble. Those military vehicles weren't supposed to be used for personal purposes at all.

Is there any vehicle available at home?" Leena was also upset. She was afraid that her date with Kevin might be ruined.

"I'm afraid none," answered Lee. Actually, he wasn't absolutely sure. He hadn't gone to the garage and checked the available vehicles. However, Kevin's mother had also gone out driving. It was very unlikely for the house to still have an available car for Kevin and his wife.

"What about Claire's car? Why doesn't she drive her own car?" Although Kevin knew that Lee probably didn't have an answer to his question, he still asked.

"I asked her the same question, she said that she had lent it to a friend," answered Lee. Lee bowed his head. If he had known that Kevin might blame him for mismanagement, he would have never given the car key to Claire. Otherwise, he wouldn't be standing there while suffering from stress.

What do you mean by that? She lent her car to a friend and then went out driving my car. Am I right?" The Major General asked with his eyes blazing with fury. He took his mobile phone out. He was about to call his sister and order her to return his car to him immediately.

Chapter 1019: Chapter 1018: To The End Of Their Life (part three)

"Major General, you're right," answered Lee. He knew that he had made a fool of himself. He should not have believed what Claire said and allowed her to drive her brother's car away.

"I'm gonna call her and ask her to drive my car home as soon as possible." Kevin started to dial Claire's numbers when Leena suddenly stopped him.

"Forget it. Let her have the car today. We can call a taxi," said Leena. She didn't want to interrupt Claire from having fun with her friends. Claire would certainly blame her if they forced her to drive the car home.

Calling a taxi will be inconvenient." Kevin answered with his irritation clearly plastered on his face. A taxi would be fine if their destination was close to their home. How about if it wasn't? How could they call a taxi without waiting for a long time once they wanted to come back?

"Never mind. We can go out another day. There are still many days left for the holiday," said Leena in a comforting voice. Her sister-in-law had already harbored grudges against Leena. She would surely say something against her if they forced her to return the car to Kevin. Therefore, Leena tried to avoid the direct confrontation with Claire.

As you wished. We can still have a walk in town. Is that ok with you?" said Kevin. Although the beautiful scenery was largely situated on the outskirts of the Capital City, they could go downtown and have some fun. He wondered if Leena would like to visit amusement parks or not.

"Yeah! I saw the Mist Pavilion on TV and it seems to be beautiful. Can we go there?" asked Leena expectantly. The Capital City was still new to Leena. However, she saw the famous Mist Pavilion on TV and found that its scenery was beautiful. Plus, she thought that the ancient colors of the place were charming.

"Not bad. Alright. You're well-informed and knowledgeable about the place. We'll go there if you wish to see the sceneries there. But I need to warn you. Please don't overestimate its beauty. You may be disappointed." The Mist Pavilion had its beauty in the past and was greatly admired by citizens in the Capital City. However, some tourists misbehaved and dropped litters everywhere, which resulted in the place getting polluted. It could have become a waste yard if the government hadn't intervened.

Although some cleaners had been employed to do the cleaning, some dangerous places couldn't be reached and cleaned easily, so the garbage was left there.

"Are you telling me that the advertising on TV is false?" asked Leena in disbelief. She was bewildered. If the TV said it was beautiful, why would Kevin suggest otherwise?

"I didn't say that TV's doing some false advertising. It is just that the Mist Pavilion lost its beauty a long time ago. Are you still interested in it?" he retorted. Actually, he didn't want to take Leena there. Its unique scenery was gone a long time ago. It might still have its unique cliff but it was still no different from any other tourist destinations now. Plus, Mist Pavilion was on the outskirts of the Capital City, and going there without driving their car would be extremely inconvenient.

"Forget it. Can't we go other funny places downtown?" The disappointment on Leena's voice was heavy when she asked. Would their romantic date end in this way? She rarely had the opportunity to enjoy Kevin's company. Today was supposed to be a cheerful day but it had been ruined by Claire.

"The downtown here is almost the same as that of S City. There's nothing special about it. If you like, I can still take you to some parks, just like what other lovers will do to kill time during their holiday." Kevin pursed his lips and shook his head. He thought that young lovers would like to do that. However, couples at his age should try to avoid that.

"Kevin, no matter how you put it, you don't want to take me out, do you? It is just that you must go with me, one way or another. Let's go. We'll stroll in those parks downtown and do what young lovers are supposed to do." Leena glowered at him domineeringly. He had made a promise that he would accompany her all day. However, he was about to break his own promise.

"Darling, I'll go wherever you go. I'm terribly misunderstood. I made a promise and will keep it," answered Kevin. Leena had put him in an awkward position. He had some scruples, however, he wouldn't have proposed the idea of having a walk with her outside if he didn't want to go out with her.

"If you intend to keep your promise, let's go." At that same time, Leena took her husband's hand with a sweet and contented smile on her face. Actually, she never liked strolling in the parks. However, she was guilty of wanting to experience how it would feel to walk in the park with their hands intertwined. Her classmates in the university did this a lot when they were in love. Leena admired the genuine smiles appearing on their faces, thus, she also wanted to have that kind of smile on her own face.

"Major General, shall I pick you up by car?" Lee stood there still. He was instantly anxious about seeing Leena and Kevin leaving. What he said was his desperate attempt to amend his fault. It was him who lent the car to Claire and consequently almost ruined Kevin's plan in the first place.

"Let's talk about it later. I have no idea when will Claire give the car back to me," answered Kevin, without even looking back at Lee. Then, he left with Leena with their hands locked together. They would walk happily and contentedly all day and all the way to the end of their life.

Chapter 1020: Chapter 1019: It's You Louisa (part one)

"Okay, I will call you when she is back!" Lee shouted behind them. He felt that Kevin was pissed off and wondered whether he would punish him once they came back to the army base. If it was really the case, he would surely be dead. He could just imagine himself falling into pieces after being exhausted with endless hard training and exercises. "Whatever!" Kevin waved his hand at him. He suddenly realized that it was a happy thing for him and Leena to just stroll along the road while holding hands.

"Kevin, are you a bad leader?" Leena turned her head and looked up at him. As they planned to have fun outdoor, she had decided to wear a pair of flatties today. It was a necessity for her to strain her neck as she was standing next to Kevin who was six feet and two inches tall. It would be impossible for her to reach his height even if she wore her heels.

"Why would you think so?" Kevin lowered his head and looked into her eyes. It was a wonder to him how Leena's eyes could always put him in a trance. Had he really loved Daisy? Why didn't he think of her in the past few weeks? His mind had been all occupied with Leena, this beautiful and adorable woman who was right beside him now.

"You see, you always make Lee frightened." Leena snorted. She found the best thing about being in this city was that she could spend time leisurely together with Kevin, just like how they were walking holding hands now. This thing could be impossible when they were in S City. He was always busy with work during the day and it was already dark when he came home. He barely had time to be with her although he came home early sometimes. For a moment, she wondered whether Daisy was as busy as him.

Leena snorted. She found the best thing about being in this city was that she could spend time leisurely together with Kevin, just like how they were walking holding hands now. This thing could be impossible when they were in S City. He was always busy with work during the day and it was already dark when he came home. He barely had time to be with her although he came home early sometimes. For a moment, she wondered whether Daisy was as busy as him.

"I think I'm going to fail compared with Daisy in this respect. You should know that in the army base, few would not tremble at the mention of her name." Kevin seemed very calm when he naturally talked about Daisy. There was no special emotion shown on his face. Was his love for her really just a spur of the moment in the past? Probably it was as what Daisy said to him, that his emotions to her were not actually love but a kind of sympathy and pity. She also said that he had mistaken those emotions as a kind of love. If she was right, why would he feel heartbroken when Edward suddenly appeared in her life? Was it because he got used to caring for her? Or was it because he couldn't accept the fact that the man standing beside Daisy was no longer himself? No matter what, he had put her down and felt relieved. He had no special feelings for her anymore. So he didn't feel sad when talking about her.

"Oh? Really? Are you sure you are not exaggerating? Sis Daisy is very nice." Leena frowned. Why didn't she feel Daisy was as horrible as Kevin said? "Because you're not her soldier." Kevin displayed an unfathomable smile. It was probable that everyone in the army base would avoid talking about her.

"Sis Daisy is awesome!" Leena beamed and her eyes turned into nice crescent shapes. She liked Daisy so much that she thought everything Daisy did was right.

"Leena, it's unfair. You are obviously being biased against me. Why are you looking at me as a bad guy when I am serious and rigid to my soldiers? Your Sis Daisy is worse and you think she's awesome?" Kevin thought that he was deeply wronged. Was this woman he was holding hands with really his wife? Why would she always turn to help others and speak against her own husband?

"It's the truth!" Leena kept herself from laughing but then stopped quickly upon seeing an approaching Audi Pikes Peak Quattro. Her intuition was suddenly ringing. She could sense that the happy time she was now sharing with Kevin was most likely about to end.

"What's up?" Kevin looked along the direction of Leena's gaze and happened to see his car passed the gate of the army base. In fact, it was coming closer to them. Different from Leena's disappointment, Kevin felt very excited. His car being returned to him meant that he could go back to his initial plan of taking Leena out to see the idyllic scenery of the neighboring town.

"Hi, Kevin, are you going out?" Claire pulled down the window and greeted as soon as she stopped the car. She was very excited to see him.

"I'm glad you've come. Get out. I'll use the car." Kevin replied with a stern voice and showed no trace of a smile on his face. He thought that Claire lacked discipline. She acted very rudely before him without any hesitation.

"But my friend is still in the car." Claire felt reluctant to get off the car and at the same time, embarrassed to be treated like this in front of her friend.

What friend? It's only a few minutes walk to our house. You get out and walk home." Seriousness was all over Kevin's darkened face when he talked. It was clear to see that he wasn't giving any space for any negotiation.

"Hi, Kevin, it's you!" Louisa pretended to be very surprised as she pushed the door open and stepped out of the car.

"Oh! It's you, Louisa." On the other hand, Kevin frowned in confusion upon seeing the woman. He wondered how Louisa became friends with his sister. He couldn't even think of anything that could connect the two.

"Huh, do you know each other?" Claire asked puzzledly. What a coincidence it was! She had thought to be a matchmaker and ship Kevin and Louisa together. That way, she could get rid of Leena. It was to her surprise that they seemed to know each other. Good for her! That saved her a lot of energy as she didn't need to introduce them anymore.
