

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1163 - Chapter 1161: Major General's Anger (part one)

Chapter 1163: Chapter 1161: Major General's Anger (part one)

What? You want to know who they are? Aren't you afraid of me already?" The mayor's son stepped closer. He stared at Kevin with a haughty look, trying to determine if he was afraid.

"You can't run around terrorizing people, even if your father is the mayor!" Kevin frowned upon seeing that Leena was shaking. He moved to pull the car door open and get her coat, but found that Claire had already taken out his army coat and put it around Leena's shoulders.

Leena, put this coat on, otherwise you will catch a cold." Claire had been sitting inside the car. Seeing that Leena was shivering, she took the coat that Kevin hung on the back of his seat and got outside. She was worried that Leena would catch a cold in this weather.

Thank you, Claire." Leena tightened the coat around her, feeling warm on the outside as well as in her heart. Leena was touched by Claire's gesture, no matter why she did it. She was very easy to please.

You... You are a Major General?" The mayor's brash son saw the dazzling epaulets on Leena's military coat and stiffened. He was, after all, the son of the mayor. He knew what the epaulets represented.

Does that make any difference?" Kevin seemed as cold as ever. He hated these spoiled brats. They depended on their parents and made a nuisance in the city. Kevin was also the son of a high-ranking officer, but he never relied on his family name. Everything he had today was earned through his own efforts.

There is a difference, of course. If you had told me who you were before, we would not have bothered you." The man's voice was much lower and less arrogant than before. He knew how powerful a Major General was.

"Listen, it doesn't matter that you wouldn't have bothered us. You should think about whether I'm going to spare you now. Your father is the mayor? So what? You think you can do wrong just because you are the son of a political figure?"

"Major General, I didn't know this beautiful woman was your wife. We'll cover the cost of the car repair. As for her mobile phone, we will buy her a new one. Just please don't tell my father. Please!" The mayor's son groveled. It was the first time he had run into a stone wall and gotten into trouble. Previously, whenever he told people that he was the mayor's son, they would simper and hand him over everything that he asked for. Today, however, he had the misfortune of provoking a Major General. He didn't expect that a rich girl with a fancy car would marry a soldier.

"If I was an ordinary citizen, would you let me go?" Kevin asked contemptuously as a sardonic smile flashed across his face.

Of course. We are targeting people who drive fancy cars. Ordinary people can't afford to buy luxury cars or give us the compensation we want." The mayor's son bowed his head. His father had no idea what he was doing outside. If the mayor found out, he was done for. Right now, he could only beg Kevin to forgive him. Unlike most people whom he troubled, Kevin was a Major General. He could contact the mayor easily.

Tell me, how many times have you done this?" Kevin's expression was serious. There was no hint of a smile on his handsome face.

"Not often. We've been spending a lot recently and we can't get money from home. That's why we're doing this." The mayor's son answered honestly, wringing his hands.

"Yes! We are just bluffing the rich people, not ordinary citizens. Major General, please don't tell our parents about this. I promise we'll never do such a thing again." Another young man begged, and thought, 'If my family know that I do this, they would never spare me.'

So you think it serves the rich people right to be blackmailed by you guys, don't you?" Kevin gave them an icy stare that sent a shiver down their spines.

No, that's not what we meant." The young men said at the same time. They had been overconfident and never run into trouble before. But this time, they had angered a Major General. The men trembled under his gaze, frightened.

"That's not what you said before. You said you want to teach me a good lesson!" Leena said in anger. 'My back is still aching.' She thought, 'I don't want Kevin to let them go so easily! What if they bother some other women tomorrow? These boys are capable of worse things.'

"That was just a joke, ma'am. Don't take it seriously." The boys had been arrogant before, but now they dejectedly stood with their head bent. They quickly refuted what she said.

"Don't take it seriously? Sorry, but I'm serious about everything. Didn't you force me to give you money? Go ahead! How much do you want, you cowards?" Leena sneered at them. 'You were being so arrogant and self-important before! Why do you look like cowards now? You bullies, I won't let you off today. Otherwise you all would really think you can do whatever you want in this city.' Leena thought.

"If you want, you can even let us buy you a new car. How dare we ask you for money?" The mayor's son fawned over her with an ingratiating smile, and cursed inwardly, 'I'm so stupid. How could I anger the wife of a major general?'

He's right. Please spare us. We didn't mean to hit you just now." Another young man whispered. Leena didn't even mention that fact; he took the initiative himself to announce that he had hit her. What a fool!

What?! You guys hit her? Which one of you did that?!" Kevin hadn't meant to do anything serious to them. He threatened to tell their parents, but that was only to frighten them into not committing the crime again. But now, knowing that they hit Leena, he immediately changed his mind.

Uh... It was me, but I didn't mean to do it." The young man drew back as he spoke. At this moment, Kevin looked like Satan. He was so frightening that the young man was afraid to stand in front of him.

Soon, a clear snapping sound was heard, followed by a howl. Kevin had grabbed the young man's hand and broken it. He was so fast that no one saw how he approached the man.

"I'm just teaching you a lesson. Real men don't hit women. I don't care who your parents are, or how high their positions in society are. If you're not happy with what I just did, you can tell me right now," Kevin said quietly. He looked so menacing that no one dared to approach him. Even Leena was scared of him. She didn't know that a gentle man like Kevin could become so terrifying.

The young man with the broken hand kept howling, not daring to meet Kevin's eyes. He was scared out of his wits. He did not know how his hand was broken in a flash. All he heard was a clear sound, following which he felt the stark pain. It had been too late to stop the Major General.

"Kevin." Leena looked at Kevin apprehensively, fearing that this could affect his career. Bureaucracy could be complicated and unpredictable in such cases.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1164 - Chapter 1162: Major General's Anger (part two)

Chapter 1164: Chapter 1162: Major General's Anger (part two)

"I am fine. How are you? Did he hit you on the back? Does it still hurt?" Kevin looked over her carefully. If they had not been in public, he would have examined her injuries at once.

It hurts a bit. I'll just get some medicine at home. It's no big deal." Leena had just wanted to teach these boys a lesson. She didn't expect that things would get so serious. She regretted her recklessness.

"No, we'll go to the hospital. You're not a doctor, so what you say doesn't count." All Kevin cared about right now was Leena. He had no time for the injured young man. For their parents' sake, Kevin didn't punish the young men severely. He only meant to teach them a lesson.

No. I'll just have Tom check my back tomorrow." Leena hated going to the hospital, so she shook her head, strongly opposing what Kevin said.

"I didn't want to be so serious about this, but for your own good, I think I should tell your parents." Kevin said, turning to the men. He took out his cell phone and called Mr. Yi. He and Mr. Yi were quite familiar with each other.

"Major General, please don't tell our parents. If they come to know about this, they wouldn't go easy on us." The young men cried and begged Kevin. They shuffled their feet nervously, wanting to escape.

"If you do something wrong, you must pay for it. You are not the center of the world." Kevin snapped at them, and he was still on the phone.

"Hello! Mr. Yi, this is Kevin. There is a civil dispute here. Come over and deal with it. By the way, call the director of Transportation Bureau too." Kevin gave the order without hesitation. Kevin knew that these young men not only extorted people but also beat them. It was a criminal offense. As a law enforcement officer, however, he couldn't take action himself.

Major General, I'll be right over. I will also inform the director of Transportation Bureau immediately." Mr. Yi replied as beads of sweat appeared on his forehead. 'I don't know what's going on with people these days. How could they mess with officers from the army base? Why do they keep picking on these big names? Some of them have angered the Senior Colonel before, and now someone angered the Major General. Do these people want to die?' Mr. Yi thought anxiously.

Okay, hurry up. I'll wait for you here." Kevin hung up the phone instantly and glanced at the men. If he didn't teach these bastards a lesson today, they would do this again. He was not going to let them off the hook.

Major General, did you just call my father?" A young man asked timidly. He heard Kevin call Mr. Yi on the phone. It must have been his father.

"Well! So you are Mr. Yi's son? That's interesting. I wonder how he would handle this matter when he arrives." Kevin twisted his lip. 'This is interesting.' Kevin thought. 'Out of the four, one is the son of the mayor and another one is the son of the director of Public Security Bureau. What about the other two? Are they the sons of the directors of Transportation Bureau and the Industrial and Commercial Bureau? Have I offended all these officials?' Kevin snorted.

"What about my father? You aren't going to call him, are you?" The mayor's son asked in horror, and thought, 'My father is the head of the city. This man doesn't have the right to ask him to come!'

Your father? No, I'm not going to call him. But I can, if you want. It's up to you." Kevin smiled humorlessly. He didn't have the power to ask the mayor to come over, but it didn't mean that the mayor wouldn't take him seriously. Kevin was a Major General and his father was a high-ranking official. The mayor might not pay heed to Kevin, but he would certainly show respect to Kevin's father.

Uh... Don't call my father." The mayor's son shook his head immediately. If the mayor really came here, it meant that the person his son messed with was very powerful.

Kevin, is this really necessary?" Leena asked with some unease. She was too young to understand bureaucracy and politics, but she knew that what Kevin did could offend the officials and potentially jeopardize his career.

"Yes, it is necessary. These officials should know what their sons are doing in the city under their names. Only then would they keep their sons in line. Otherwise it would be too late when they commit an even bigger offense." Kevin frowned. Why did these rich kids of the bureaucracy want to discredit their parents and drag their names through the dirt? Did they not consider that their actions were wrong? Did they not know how much harm they would bring to others? Leena pressed her lips together. 'Kevin is right. These men are still young. If they do something worse, they'd get in serious trouble. It is for their own good that they are taught a lesson in time.' Leena thought.

"Leena, it's windy. Let's get inside the car." Claire had been watching the young men quietly. She felt like she was watching herself. Claire did not behave criminally like them, but she had done a lot of indecent things in her father's name. It seemed that there was not a huge difference between her and them.

"Yes. Nana, get in the car with Claire. When this is done, we'll go home together," Kevin said. He was used to the cold weather, but it was too chilly for Leena, who was wearing a miniskirt. Leena didn't like the cold. Even wrapped up in the army coat, she shivered. He could tell that she could barely stand the temperature.

"No, I'll be right here with you. Oh, I forgot to give you your coat. How stupid I am! Put your coat on first. I'll just wear my own." Leena took off the coat and handed it to Kevin. She bent and pulled her own long one out of the car and quickly put it on. Leena felt warmer immediately. Her coat was made of velvet, so it was warmer than Kevin's thin army one.

Kevin put on the coat that she handed over without arguing. His mind lingered on her promise that she would stay with him. Warmth seeped into his heart. It seemed that the cold winter night had also grown warmer.

The young men looked at Kevin with wide eyes, startled. They hadn't been so intimidated previously. Kevin looked even more majestic and dignified wearing his army coat. It made him look unapproachable. They avoided his eyes. The young man with the broken hand was especially frightened.

They wished that they could turn back time so they would not have hit Leena's car, and especially not have forced her to pay. Things would not have ended up like this in that scenario.

Mr. Yi arrived in just over ten minutes. The director of Transportation Bureau was not far behind. As soon as they saw their sons, their faces turned red with anger.

"Major General, we're here. What is going on?" Mr. Yi asked. It was winter but there was a thin layer of sweat on his forehead. He didn't know how to react to this and gave his son a fierce look.

"You got here quite fast." Kevin had his hands in his pockets and appeared arrogant. He gazed at the officers thoughtfully. They wouldn't have been so livid if it wasn't their sons who were guilty of crime.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1165 - Chapter 1163: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part one)

Chapter 1165: Chapter 1163: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part one)

"Sorry, Major General, but how did all this happen?" Mr. Wang, chief of the Transportation Bureau asked with respect. He already knew that it was just a typical rear-end collision the moment he set eyes on those two cars. What worried him though was that Mr. Yi was also summoned. Traffic accidents were not a part of Mr. Yi's responsibility at all. Things went even more complicated when he found out that his good-for-nothing son was there too, together with the Mayor's son. His heart missed a beat as he suddenly felt confused. Could there be something more than just an accident in here?

See those guys over there? I think you two know who their fathers are better than I do." Kevin pouted his lips to point to the two young men. A few seconds later his mouth curled into a smirk. His sarcasm was so obvious in his words.

"Yes, of course. Have they done something that offended you? If that is the case, I must apologize for all their wrongdoing," Mr. Yi answered immediately and carefully. He had cold feet when faced with Daisy before. Now that it was Kevin whom he needed to deal with, he could just hope that it wasn't obvious that he was frantic and even shaking in his shoes.

You don't have to scramble to take the fall, Mr. Yi. They are grown ups and can take responsibility for themselves. They staged an accident and tried to blackmail my wife. Worse, they have injured her in the process. Based on your professional judgment, what crimes should they be charged with?" Kevin asked the old man without even looking at him. He was casual while talking about the incident as if it was not important, making it hard for others to figure out what was in his mind.

"How dare they do these!" Mr. Yi raised his voice after hearing Kevin's words. He swiftly turned to the young guys and demanded, "What are you waiting for, you little bastards? Come here and apologize to Major General and his wife properly right now! They might forgive you if you make a sincere apology." After saying so, he turned his eyes to Leena, who was standing by Kevin. He had heard that Kevin already married but he never knew who his wife was. The lady looked familiar to him after he had a good look. He couldn't recollect where he had seen her though.

"We are terribly sorry, Mr. and Mrs. Gu! We know we were wrong. Please be assured that we will change and things like this won't happen in the future!" The guys uttered sincerely with their heads bowed down. They dared not to show any arrogance right now.

Meanwhile, Leena was at a loss for words. She stared at the guys when they bowed to her before looking back at Kevin awkwardly. She never expected for things to get as messed up like this. In fact, she didn't even know how they would mend things up.

"It's good that you can admit your mistake frankly and we accept your apology. However, as a soldier, I know it too well that one may repeat an offense if the punishment is not served right. I believe that Mr. Yi would agree with me on this since he is an experienced policeman," Kevin replied. Then he looked at the old man before him meaningfully straight in the eyes and added, "You know what to do, Mr. Yi." Curiosity was suddenly eating Kevin and he would like to know how Mr. Yi would handle the situation.

"That is for sure. How's Mrs. Gu? Is she seriously injured? I think we'd better take her to the hospital first." Mr. Yi tried to change the topic. He was a cunning old man and there was no doubt about it. He just mentioned Leena's condition to distract everyone. It was relatively easy to get his own son and the other two young men penalized. The problem was, the mayor's son was among them. He wasn't even sure if he should be touching the man. It would definitely offend the mayor if he did. It would be such a disgrace to the mayor if his son was sent to the police.

"Don't bother. We will go and get the wounds treated on our own after things here are settled." Kevin responded. Speaking of which, Kevin worried about Leena more than anyone else. It was just that he must make sure that these snooty guys paid the price for hurting her before taking her to the hospital. Otherwise, they would never learn their lesson and would keep on abusing their fathers' authority, thinking that they could just slip through the net.

"Certainly. But you see, Major General, one of them is the mayor's son..." Mr. Yi said hesitantly as he cast a glance to Kevin and then quickly looked down. He was now caught in a dilemma and started to tremble. What should he do? The effort of pleasing one without offending the other was like steering between Scylla and Charybdis.

"Aren't you the chief of Public Security Bureau? Surely you don't need my advice on how to handle this situation. All people are equal before the law and you know that. They cannot be exceptions even if their fathers hold high positions," said Kevin sternly while glaring at Mr. Yi. It was obvious that these young men's family background and their parents' social positions had turned them into arrogant spoiled brats. Their false sense of superiority had made them think that they could get away even if they broke the law. That was why they dared to commit crimes in broad daylight as they presumed that their parents could clean up their mess no matter what they had done.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1166 - Chapter 1164: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part two)

Chapter 1166: Chapter 1164: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part two)

You are absolutely right. Thank you for reminding me, Major General. I will do just as you say," said Mr. Yi promptly. He read between the lines and understood what Kevin wanted. At the same time, he realized that Kevin's words had also addressed his concerns. He could now punish those guys without any fear. He shouldn't be scared of being blamed by his superiors anymore as it was Kevin, the Major General, who commanded him. That was everything that he needed to save himself. Mr. Yi was an absolutely clever and sophisticated man, he would not be in this high position otherwise.

Great. Now, Mr. Wang, could you please take a look at the scene and see who should be responsible for this accident?" Kevin then turned to Mr. Wang and asked. He had actually seen right through Mr. Yi and knew that he wanted him to be held responsible for all the consequences arising therefrom. However, he was ready to bear those consequences since he really wanted to teach those young guys a lesson.

"It couldn't be more obvious. It was all this BMW's fault. Don't worry, Major General, we will get your Ferrari fixed as soon as possible. We guarantee your satisfaction." Mr. Wang replied with a huge smile once he was called. He was well aware of how powerful Kevin was as a Major General. Even with his prestigious family background aside,

Kevin was still much more powerful than him in the hierarchy. It was given that Kevin's power was limited to the military jurisdiction and his to administrative jurisdiction. Nonetheless, it was more likely for the mayor to treat the military with humble respect if they would ever clash. Thus, it was just natural for a small potato like him not to dare act presumptuously before Kevin.

"Yes, yes. You see, Major General, we are sensible men and can tell right from wrong. You can be sure of that," Mr. Yi echoed, bowing and scraping. He bit his lip. It was true that he got very upset and disappointed about what his son had done, but as a father, he didn't have the heart to see him suffer when being punished. It was the reason why he was trying his best to calm Kevin down. He could only hope that Kevin would not be too hard on those young men.

"I'm glad to hear that. Seems that I don't have to tell you what to do next. By the way, is he your son, Mr. Wang?" Kevin asked as he shot a glance at one of the guys. "I'm sorry but I accidentally broke his arm just now. Could you please get him treated before putting him into detention? Sorry for all the trouble." Kevin said those things on purpose. Superficially, he was talking about the broken arm. However, what he wanted to stress was that he wanted those guys to receive detention and nothing less. He was sure that Mr. Yi and Mr. Wang were clever enough to figure it out. They wouldn't dare practice favoritism and bring their sons home later on unless they didn't want their positions anymore. Honestly, detention was not even enough if he would consider all their evil deeds. They should be put behind bars for one or two years to make sure that they learned their lesson.

"Thank you for disciplining my son for me, Major General. I will make sure that he reflects on his mistakes," said Mr. Wang as he wiped off the cold sweat from his forehead. 'Thank God that he has only broken his arm', he even thought. He knew that even if his son was crippled by Kevin, he had to shed tears of gratitude no matter what.

"Don't thank me for that. You know he has laid a finger on someone he is never supposed to. Call me when the car is done. As for the broken cellphone, well... just forget about it since you have to pay a lot for the car repairs." Kevin said with a smirk. He knew that these officials were only acting humbly because of his high status. They wouldn't have acted this way if it were just some civilians that their sons had bullied. He knew how widespread was this type of injustice nationwide and he was extremely sad that he couldn't change it by himself. The farthest he could do was to change the ambiance around him but things in other places were beyond his reach.

"Sure, sure. We will. We can guarantee that the car will be as good as new soon. Thank you for your understanding." Mr. Wang responded while looking at the floor. He was too afraid to meet Kevin's gaze.

"Mr. Yi, tell the mayor to take things up with me if he has any complaint. I don't think that he would spoil his son and disapprove the punishment after all." Kevin said as he looked at the mayor's son. Then he shook his head disappointedly and sighed. The young man came from a prominent family, he was very likely to have a promising future if he studied hard and behaved. It was a pity that he chose to violate the law. 'There must have been something wrong with how his family educated him. I would definitely break my son's leg if he acts this way,' he thought.

This was Kevin's idea about education and parenting, and he had put it in practice in the future. That was the reason why his future son would both fear and look up to him. Nonetheless, it was also the same thing that would enable his only son to surpass his achievements at a very young age.

"I totally agree. I will absolutely explain all of this to him," said Mr. Yi as he nodded. However, he was actually moaning in his head. He did plan to explain to the mayor but he didn't have the guts to tell the whole story as exactly as it happened. He would need to choose his words very carefully later to ensure that the mayor would take things well.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1167 - Chapter 1165: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part three)

Chapter 1167: Chapter 1165: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part three)

That's all. We've got to go now, and I'll leave the rest to you two." Kevin ordered. He wasn't worried that they would cheat on him and send their sons back home after he left. He was confident that they would obey him since he had been talking tough.

"That's what we should do, Major General. We are so sorry to have troubled you and wasted your time," Mr. Yi said, grovelling to Kevin. He spoke in the humblest tone as he had never done before. Thus, it wasn't hard to imagine how much pent-up anger he would release after Kevin left. He couldn't go against Kevin, nor did he dare to be too critical with the mayor's son. Nonetheless, he could surely take it all out on others.

That's very kind of you, Mr. Yi. How about this? You can report their performance to me every day during their detention. That way, I will know whether they are truly reflecting on their mistakes. Would that help relieve some of your guilt?" Playfulness was in Kevin's voice when he asked. He had already turned away but Mr. Yi's huge display of politeness had him curiously turn back. Thus, he took his time to tease them. Besides, it was a good idea to assure that they wouldn't practice favoritism as that would give him an overview of what was going on. Mr. Yi wouldn't have a choice but to do as he said. Nonetheless, Kevin would know whether they were being lenient to the young guys regardless if they planned to rebel against his command secretly anyway.

"Well... it's..." Mr. Yi became a bit hesitant. As a matter of fact, he did plan to just go through the motions. However, Kevin's words seemed to serve as a warning to him and hinted that he should never dream about playing any tricks on him behind his back. His plan proved infeasible.

"What's wrong? Can't you do it?" A wicked smile cracked Kevin's lips. He knew those cunning old foxes too well, thus this idea. He hoped to at least humble these unscrupulous officials a bit by doing this.

"No, no. That is not what I mean. Of course, I can do it." Mr. Yi hastened to explain. He would never admit how difficult it was to do as he was ordered at the moment. He wouldn't dare to enrage Kevin more than this.

"Awesome! I'll get out of your way then. See you soon," Kevin said, his eyes roaming over their faces. Kevin was a nice person in general but he had to show a tougher face today since these people reached his limit.

"Goodbye, Major General, take care," the two officials replied together and then bowed. They were afraid to show any resentment even after Kevin had turned his back to them.

"Babe, take all of your valuables out of your car. I will drive you back in mine, okay?" said Kevin affectionately as soon as he faced Leena. It was almost magical how he turned into a different person completely within a span of a few seconds. His stoic face was suddenly full of love and tenderness as he looked at his wife. Everyone else stood aghast when they heard him say those soft words. 'That mood change was monumentally quick!' they all thought. At the same time, Mr. Yi and Mr. Wang came to realize just how displeased Kevin was earlier. Compared to how he looked right now, his image earlier couldn't be tougher. This silently signaled them of how greatly he was offended. Thus, they had to be very careful not to upset him anymore in the days ahead.

"Okay, I get it." Leena nodded and got into the car. After taking the bags out, she turned and smiled apologetically at Mr. Yi and the others. She then left with Kevin. She had behaved properly throughout the scenario and displayed her elegance, reservedness, and composure as a decent official's wife. She had stood aside with respect while Kevin was confronting them instead of interrupting her husband.

"You guys, mind your manner and stand properly!" Mr. Yi finally snapped as soon as Kevin's military car was out of sight.

"Dad, you're not going to put us into detention, are you? I don't want to spend the night there, I want to sleep on my bed," grumbled one of the guys. As soon as Kevin left, he instantly went back to his old self and leaned against the car door with a scornful look. Such an extravagant idler!

"I'm afraid that it's not up to you. Didn't you hear me? Stand up straight and stop acting like a hooligan!" Mr. Yi yelled at him this time. He couldn't believe that his own son had grown into such a useless man. Rather than become a law-abiding person, he turned into a racketeer at such a young age. Could anyone believe that the chief of the Public Security Bureau's son had committed crimes? What a shame!

"Alright, alright, I will. There's no need to bite my head off." The young man then rose up with resignation while rolling his eyes. Seeing him still act like a total bum, Mr. Yi fumed with anger. So it was true when people said, "Spare the rod, spoil the child". Mr. Yi now regretted about not paying enough attention to disciplining and educating his son. It might have been his fault that the guy was going nowhere.

"Calm down, Mr. Yi. It's no use getting angry now. We'd better follow Major General's orders. We've got no other choice, you see. Besides, it's about time that these little assholes learn their lessons, lest they never mend their way," comforted Mr. Wang and sighed. It was his wife who took responsibility for their children's discipline. What an epic fail! It seemed that she had spoiled their son too much. Thus, he grew out to be rude and rebellious.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1168 - Chapter 1166: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part four)

Chapter 1168: Chapter 1166: Teach Them A Good Lesson (part four)

"Dad, look at my arm, is it really broken?" Mr. Wang's son cried with his face twisted with pain and horror.

"That would be best. Let's see whether you dare to make troubles like this in the future. Come on, do as the Major General says. You know what to expect. We will get your arm fixed first then send you to the detention center. Is that clear?" Mr. Wang spoke sharply. He didn't have the nerve to defy Kevin. If Kevin had laid the sanction unto the mayor's son, then it would be stupid to think that his own son could escape the punishment.

"Take them back to the police station and make a good record of their confessions. Then put them into the detention center according to the procedures." Mr. Yi gestured his subordinates to go. What troubled him most now was how he should tell the mayor about what had happened. It was just difficult to explain why he would get his son arrested without irritating him.

"I will take my son to the hospital first. Don't worry, I have called my men to clean up the scene and they will be here soon," Mr. Wang said as he shook his head helplessly. Apart from his son, there was a high repair cost to worry about. The more expensive the car was, the higher the repair fee was for it. Good Lord! They had to pay for a Ferrari!

"Go ahead. As for the repair fee, please tell me how much it is later so that we can split the bill. After all, my son is also to blame, and I should shoulder the responsibility too."

Mr. Yi suggested. He was now feeling quite embarrassed after his nervousness wore off. How he cringed before Kevin was shameful as all his subordinates were there. This undoubtedly impaired his dignity.

"Don't worry about the cost. I'll go now. Please take charge of the operation once my men arrive." Mr. Wang said and was about to leave with his son. Although he reproached his son by saying that he wished his arm was broken, he was actually very worried about him. So after arranging all the work, he couldn't wait to take him to the doctor and get him examined.

No problem. You can trust me. We have known each other for years, so please don't be too polite." Mr. Yi replied.

"Of course I trust you. Who else do you think can I count on? My son? Save it. I could only wish that he would not cause any trouble from now on." Mr. Wang answered as he allowed himself a wry smile. He had always known his son to be a troublemaker. It was just that he never expected him to be worse, he became a lawbreaker. He couldn't imagine what terrible things he would do next if he was left undisciplined. Kevin's way of handling the matter was like a loud wake-up call for him. Though sending his own son to the police station was a humiliation, he had learned the importance of parental discipline for children.

"I couldn't agree more. But we deserve it, for we haven't been good fathers all these years, have we?" Mr. Yi also sighed. Had they realized their mistakes earlier, things like this might never have happened. However, it was better late than never. As long as they started to pay more attention to educating their children, there was still hope that those guys could start again with a clean slate.

On the other hand, Kevin drove to the hospital instead of heading home. And it was the realization that they were heading in a different direction that threw Leena into an instant panic. "Aren't we going home?" she asked nervously.

"No, we are not. We are going to the hospital and get you checked out. I need to make sure that you are safe and sound before going back," answered Kevin. He knew that Leena was afraid of hospitals but he was so worried about her that he must take no chances.

"No, I'm not going. It was just a punch, I bet we can deal with the wound back home. If there is any, we will just need to apply some medicine to it. Simple!" Leena exclaimed, bit her lip, and then looked at Kevin in terror. She had harbored an irrational fear of the hospital and shuddered at the idea of seeing a doctor.

No, absolutely not. What if there's an internal injury? What if one of your bones or organs got hurt? That kind of injuries may not be evident, but they could be serious. Do you think you can treat this kind of injury by applying some medicine?" Kevin said with a frown. There was a determined look on his face, which showed that his decision was not open to negotiation.

"But that's the last place I want to go! Can we go home, Kevin? I'm willing to go anywhere except the hospital," Leena begged with imploring eyes. One could tell just how frightened she became by the fear on her face.

If so, tell me how can we make sure that you are completely unscathed, both inside and out, other than going to the hospital?" Kevin asked a bit irritably while slowing down the car. Besides worrying about Leena, he was a bit upset now. There was something that had been troubling him. The accident happened when he wasn't even driving far ahead of her. She could have telephoned him for help at once but she didn't. Why? Was it because she didn't need him at all? Did he ever have a place in her heart? He came to feel dispensable and unwanted as a husband.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1169 - Chapter 1167: A False Alarm (part one)

Chapter 1169: Chapter 1167: A False Alarm (part one)

"Okay, fine. On one condition. I get to choose the hospital." Leena studied the man's unusually grave face. She could tell he was trying to hold back his anger, but didn't know why. "Okay, but you have to get yourself checked out." Kevin exhaled sharply and tried to cool down. He was angry, and it wasn't helping. It wasn't the time to play the blame game. He wanted to find out how badly Leena was hurt.

Hand me your phone. I need to make a call." Leena frowned at her own phone. The thugs had broken it in the altercation. She sighed. She'd have to see what she could get off it, and then throw it away.

Kevin shot her a glance, his expression confused. He had no idea why Leena wanted his phone, but he handed it over anyway. Then he turned his eyes back to the road and started focusing on driving.

"Hello, this is Tom. Who's this?" Tom said. He was at the hospital, examining the X-ray clipped to the wall. He took a sip of his coffee after answering.

"Hi Tom. It's me, Leena. Are you at work?" Leena stuck out her tongue, making a cute face. Tom couldn't see it through the phone, but Kevin could. He saw her eyes full of mischief, and wondered what she was playing at.

"Oh hey, Leena. Anything wrong? Nothing serious, I hope." Tom set his coffee mug down and looked away from the X-ray. He wasn't familiar with the number, so he didn't know it was from Leena at first. When he figured out who it was, he put aside his work and gave her his full attention.

"Nope. Do I need a reason to call? I haven't seen you for a fat minute. I miss you, Tom. How are you?" Leena knew how to turn on the innocent charm and turn into a sweet little girl. Her brothers would fall for it every time.

"Cut the crap, Leena. What do you want?" Tom knew Leena well. It was late, and she wouldn't call him if she didn't have a reason. He didn't buy her line about missing him -- he knew it was more than just a friendly call. He knew the deal.

"Are you at the hospital? I can meet you there," Leena said with some hesitation. She was hoping not to worry Tom too much.

"Are you hurt?" Tom sounded nervous. He was relaxed, but now he was worried. People didn't come to the hospital unless they were hurt.

"No. Just tell me whether you're there or not," Leena replied in an evasive tone. She wasn't going to tell him what happened just now, or he'd freak out. Everyone would be worried, and that was the last thing she needed.

"Yeah. I just finished a procedure. Come on over. I'll be in my office." Tom once again picked up his cup and took a sip. His face looked weary under the lamp. One of these days, he needed to retire.

"Ah! Have you eaten?" Leena hesitated, debating whether to turn to this busy man for a minor injury.

"I'll eat in a bit. I'm not hungry now." After an operation, Tom had to spend some time just relaxing. It was tiring work, and it took awhile to get his appetite back.

Well, I'll bring your favorite food with me." Leena looked out the window. If she remembered correctly, there was a restaurant close by that served Hunan food. She could buy Tom's favorite there: Griddle-Cooked, Shredded, Spicy, Salted Duck.

"Really? That's really nice of you, Leena. I was just wondering where I should go to dinner." Tom's eyes shone with excitement. His mouth was watering already.

Yeah. Wait for me. See you in a while." Leena quickly hung up the phone without waiting for Tom's reply. This was perfect. Now she didn't need to feel so embarrassed bothering him.

Tom stared at his phone, shaking his head helplessly. He grinned bitterly. Leena, as a married woman, was still so naughty.

"Let's swing by the Hunan Cuisine Restaurant, Kevin," Leena said urgently. She had seen the sign already, so she hung up the phone before Tom could say anything.

"Okay." Kevin didn't need to say much more. He knew Leena's plans, because he heard her on the phone. He cursed himself for being a fool. He forgot all about Tom, the genius of the medical world. If anyone knew how to patch Leena up, it was him.

"We're stopping? Are you hungry then?" Claire was taken aback when they stopped. She was lost in thought, and was suddenly thrust back to reality.

"No. I'm getting Tom some dinner. I won't be long." Leena smiled, grabbed her wallet, and left the car. The wind picked up, and chilled her to the bone. She shivered, and then suddenly felt a warm embrace.

"I'll go with you." Kevin gathered his wife's coat, pulling it tightly to her and fastening it. Then they walked to the restaurant, his arm around her shoulder.

She glanced at the man. He looked cool, but what he did warmed her heart. She felt that even the chilliest weather would be as warm as summer, just as long as she was with him.

They got to the hospital half an hour later. Luckily, the food was still steaming hot despite the cold weather.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1170 - Chapter 1168: A False Alarm (part two)

Chapter 1170: Chapter 1168: A False Alarm (part two)

"Tom?" Leena carefully opened the door a crack and popped her head in to look for Tom.

"Come in." Tom didn't think anything of it. He thought that Leena came by herself, so he just glanced at her casually and turned his gaze back to the case files again.

"Sorry to disturb you, Dr. Qin." Kevin followed Leena into the office and greeted Tom first.

"Hey! Kevin! Been awhile. Oh -- oh no! Is Leena okay?" Tom was surprised to see Kevin, but he was more worried about Leena. He probably took her here, and Kevin wasn't a frivolous man. It was likely that Leena was hurt.

"Yeah. Someone elbowed her in the back. I thought I'd bring her here and get it checked out." Kevin liked Tom. He was a lot nicer than Edward or Duke.

What? Leena was attacked? What happened? Do Edward and Duke know?" Tom stood up from the chair when Kevin told him this. This was not the time to be careless. Leena was sick recently, so he had to take precautions.

"Don't tell them, Tom. They'll have a fit. It's annoying," Leena said anxiously. She didn't want to have them make a fuss over her, so she hoped he'd keep quiet.

Come over here and lie down on the couch. Let me take a look." Tom stared at Leena angrily. There probably wasn't anything wrong. Otherwise, she wouldn't be this happy. The person who beat her was asking for trouble. If Duke knew, he'd track the guy down and chop off his hand. If Edward found out, who knew what might happen? Maybe he'd kill the thug.

Go ahead and eat, Tom. No rush," Leena said with a smile, and put the takeout bag on the table.

"Naw. Let's get this over with. So, lie down, please." Tom was angry because Leena hadn't taken good care of herself. Yes, it might be the 21st century. But she would always be their little princess, and anything that happened to her was automatically deserving of treatment.

"You sound mad. You're scaring me." Leena pouted after she said this. She walked over to the couch and lay on it, like he asked.

"Close the door," said Tom, jerking his head in Kevin's direction. At his words, he reached for the remote and raised the indoor temperature several degrees higher. He couldn't have Leena catching cold, now.

Kevin nodded and quickly closed the door. He was worried about Leena, and paid no attention to Claire at all. Claire was apparently still lost in her own thoughts too; otherwise she would have said something by now.

"Can you take off your coat? Make it easier. I don't have X-ray vision," Tom teased.

"Err... Sorry. I forgot." Leena made a face and stuck her tongue out at the man. She stood up to shed her long coat, pausing to hang it on the coat rack, and then lay back down again.

Tom shook his head. Sometimes he felt helpless to help her, although he was used to her being scatter-brained.

"Oh my god," Tom said, shuddering. "We have some bad bruising here." Worry wrinkled Tom's forehead as he saw the severe bruising marring the girl's back. Her skin was fairly white, so the bruising looked terrible. It stood out starkly to anyone looking at it.

"Is it serious?" Kevin popped his head in. He didn't take a look at the wound before they came, so he didn't know whether it was serious. He just thought it was a good idea that she should be examined, just in case. Tom looked at Kevin. "Sort of," he said, and then turned his attention back to Leena. "Leena, I'm going to apply pressure to different parts of your back. Let me know if it hurts." Tom extended his hand and pressed lightly around the bruising. He was checking if the impact had affected the bones in any way.

Okay. Go ahead." Leena started to blush. She felt shy as her back was bare. Her conservative upbringing wouldn't let her feel any other way.

"Does it hurt when I press here?" Tom asked the girl in a concerned tone. He moved his hands and pushed a little. Sweat broke out on his forehead -- he didn't want this sweet girl to feel any pain.

"Ouch! It hurts!" Leena had a low pain threshold. She grimaced as Tom pressed hard.

"Alright, we're done now. You can sit up. We'll need an X-ray just to be on the safe side." Grim-faced, Tom pulled down her shirt. He knew Leena could hardly bear any pain at all, but he was still uneasy. He might find something -- a pinched nerve, strained muscle, a bruised bone perhaps. Maybe an X-ray would show him what was going on.

"What? Why do I need to take an X-ray? Can't you just give me something for the pain?" Leena pursed her lips, looking pitiable. She came to Tom precisely because she didn't want an X-ray. It was a headache for her, and frankly she was more than a little afraid of it. But she ended up needing one anyway.

"You can't just bat those eyes at me and expect to get anywhere. You need an X-ray. Let's go. I'll take you there." Tom grabbed her coat from the coat rack, and held it up while she put her arms through the sleeves. He affectionately tucked the loosened tendrils of hair behind her ear, while her husband Kevin could do nothing but stand by anxiously.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1171 - Chapter 1169: A False Alarm (part three)

Chapter 1171: Chapter 1169: A False Alarm (part three)

"What happens after that? An injection?" Leena gulped nervously. She was going to cry if Tom said "yes". First an X-ray, now an injection?

"It depends. You won't need one if the injury isn't serious." Tom showed his teeth in a humorless grin. He was starting to relish this in a way. Leena was quite pretty, and she was especially beautiful when she was nervous. He enjoyed seeing her this way.

"You mean I may have to get an injection," Leena said in a resentful tone. She tried her best to give him a heart-rending look.

"That's right. Don't try to weasel out of it." Really, Tom was curious how she got injured, but now was not the best time. But he used discretion and didn't ask Kevin how it happened. But he did shoot an inquiring glance at him.

Kevin..." Since she wasn't getting through to Tom, she thought maybe if she begged Kevin, who'd been quiet so far, he could speak up for her, and save her all this pain.

Don't be afraid. I'm here with you." Kevin gave his wife a comforting smile. It was nice to know that she could depend on him for something. He thought maybe she would turn to her brothers to get whatever she needed, so he was happy to be needed by her.

"You do this every time you get a checkup," Tom said. "What are you going to do when you're pregnant?" Tom shook his head and went out first. To be honest, Edward, Duke and Tom were to blame for this. They were protective of Leena, waited on her hand and foot. So the girl grew up to be feminine and delicate.

"Err..." That gave Leena a nasty shock. She never thought about that. Tom pretty much laid it out clear. She'd get pregnant sooner or later as they didn't use birth control. The baby would come at any time, and she wasn't nearly ready for something like that.

Don't worry, honey. He's just talking out his ass," Kevin said patting his wife's hand. Despite his comforting words, he couldn't help thinking. If a baby scared her this much, he wouldn't force her to have one. A child might not fit their happy marriage.

"Wait up, Kevin." Claire darted forward to keep up with everyone. She once again saw how Leena was cared for, and went green with envy. All these guys that she'd never met! How did she do it?

Tom personally escorted Leena to the X-ray room, so they didn't have to wait long before they got the X-ray. He finally put his fears to rest after he checked it. Fortunately Leena wasn't seriously hurt. He overreacted deliberately. Fear lined his face as he checked the X-ray exposures.

"Everything okay, Tom?" Leena asked with a trace of hesitation and unease, while Tom was studying the X-ray. She didn't like the look on his face.

"Nothing serious. I'll prescribe some bruise juice for you. Apply it on time once you're home." Tom originally wanted to frighten her, but he gave up that idea. He didn't want her to burst into a loud sobbing fit. She just wanted to go home, like everyone would.

Really? Didn't I say it was nothing? Ha ha!" Leena finally wore the biggest smile. She looked happier than when she first got to the hospital. She was so excited about this that she even planted a kiss on Tom's handsome face.

"Look how happy you are! Now you can tell me how you got hurt." Leena's kiss didn't satisfy Tom's inquisitive nature. He got his question off his chest after he was sure that Leena was okay.

"Well... Eat something, Tom. The food's getting cold." Leena really didn't know how to explain what happened to Tom, so she changed the subject instead.

"Fine, you minx." Tom ruffled her hair. He didn't want to force her since she decided to remain tight-lipped. Since she wasn't volunteering any info, she wouldn't tell him anything no matter how much he pumped her for it.

Hee hee. I know you love me the most. Take your time with the food. We're heading back." Leena said goodbye and Tom didn't press her further. She especially didn't want him to ask Kevin about it.

"Okay. Head on home. Have a safe drive. Remember to apply the medicine after taking a bath. Help Leena with that, Kevin." Tom didn't ask them to stay. It was late, and he would also go home after stuffing his stomach with food and dealing with his caseload.

"No problem. Thank you, doctor." Kevin was sincere. He really was thankful. His wife had a close relationship with Tom, but he still needed to be polite and respectful to him.

"Come on. Don't stand on ceremony. I'm no stranger. Just call me Tom! I'll go home after I've finished up here." The procedure took several hours. Tom had to admit he was tired.

"Bye, Tom. Let's go." Leena waved goodbye to Tom and then walked out of his office, Kevin on one arm, and Claire on the other. She didn't even think of introducing Claire to Tom, and Tom didn't seem to know she was there. They all forgot her.

My Wife is a beautiful Officer Chapter 1172 - Chapter 1170: You Are Kidding Me Again (part one)

Chapter 1172: Chapter 1170: You Are Kidding Me Again (part one)

Leena had been smiling mildly since they left Tom's office. It was refreshing that Claire didn't refuse her friendly approach as before. She let Leena hold her arm without any objection. It might not be a huge change, but it was definitely a good start for their budding relationship.

Leena, how come your friends are all so excellent? blurted Claire all of the sudden. She just couldn't hold back the curiosity anymore. Goodness! Why were Leena's friends all elites? First, there were Edward and Rain who were both from FX International and then now, here was Tom, a freaking eligible who owned a hospital!

Haha! Trust me, you will not find them as perfect as you think once you get to know them." Leena chuckled in delight. She grew up with these outstanding men and she sure knew all of them like the back of her hand. They might appear to be the coolest and most domineering people ever, but they were all like kind big brothers to her. She couldn't even see nor feel their differences compared to other men.

Really? Are you kidding me?" Claire furrowed her eyebrows as she shot Leena a doubtful glare. Uncontented, she even looked straight at Leena's eyes in hope of finding the truth.

Yes, of course, it is the truth. Why should I lie to you? A sincere smile cracked Leena's lips and Claire ended up cutely squinting her eyes to examine her sister-in-law. 'Okay, that smile looks genuine. She couldn't be lying. Oh, her smile is almost dazzling me.' she thought.

Meanwhile, Kevin wasn't even talking as he just stayed quietly, listening to the two. Seeing that his wife and sister getting along well made him feel much more comfortable than ever.

He was in his best mood as he quickly drove his car back to the Grand Apartment. The gentle breeze was blowing outside, and it was adding a bit of chill to the winter night. However, Kevin couldn't care less about it as he stood inside that cozy and warm room. There was a tempting body that was lying face-down on the bed. Her pajama-top was pulled up to the nape of her neck, displaying both her naked back and luscious curves. It was Leena. She just had a sponge bath and was now waiting for Kevin to apply medicines on her wound.

Nana, it might hurt a little, okay? Try to bear it. Scream out if it really hurts. You will feel better after doing it. Kevin's voice trembled a bit as he spoke. He didn't get the chance to see how bad Leena's wound was earlier. Thus, he got a bit shocked once he saw it for the first time. It was terrible! The bruise was so ugly against her smooth and alabaster skin, hence the sudden sorrow and regret flooded him. What he did to the person who injured Leena was not enough! He should have torn him into pieces!

Ummm, I know, responded Leena in a tiny voice. It was her obedience and sensibility that kept her calm during the incident earlier. She never wanted to make Kevin worry. However, she wasn't able to stop herself from shrinking back and wincing as soon as Kevin's hands started rubbing the medicine to her back and forth.

Does it hurt? Seeing his wife's reaction made Kevin's heart heavier. He would definitely feel a lot better if this wound was on his back instead. Nonetheless, he didn't stop his fingers from pressing harder against her wound as that was the only way for it to absorb the medicine better. All he wanted was for Leena to recover as soon as possible.

If I say yes, will you stop? Leena was teary-eyed when she turned to him. Her beautiful face was all red and it was obvious that she did not like what was going on now.

That is impossible but I can consider pressing on it lighter, said Kevin immediately with a forced smile. He pretended not to see her pitiful face as he was afraid that he might stop applying the medicine on her. Leena's pain tolerance wasn't good and knowing that made him want to give in. He let out a deep sigh, shook his head and then lessened the pressure he was applying on her back.

Well, I know that! I know that you don't cherish me! Leena complained while pouting. She badly wanted to say something to convert her attention from the pain but then she wasn't able to control what came out of her mouth. Her unintentional words instantly made Kevin freeze.

He was just suddenly standing there while looking at her with his mouth ajar. I'm sorry. He finally managed to mutter after a long silence. He then turned away, picked another ointment and then continued putting it on her back.

Uh! Sorry. I am not blaming you. I didn't mean to say that. A frustrated groan escaped Leena's chest. She just said those as a joke. It was not supposed to mean anything at all.

It's fine. It just makes sense if you want to blame me. I failed to protect you in the first place. You wouldn't be suffering this if I was there on time. I'm really sorry, Nana." He withdrew his hands from her and relaxed his breath. It was a relief that he finally finished applying the medicine to Leena as he didn't need to fray his nerves anymore. Little did Leena know how his heart hurt painfully every time she clenched her fist, trembled, and screamed. It was even worse than the physical pain he felt.

Kevin, are you angry at me?" Feeling the regret in his words, Leena turned her head again and looked at him. She remained lying on her stomach since Kevin hadn't cued her that he was done.

"No. I'm not angry at you. I'm mad at myself," replied Kevin. "Anyway, I'm finished. You can turn around now." Without any more explanation, he pulled her pajama-top down and then turned to the bathroom to wash his hands.

Leena sat up and watched her husband disappear behind their bathroom door. She looked so confused and her mind was in turmoil. She hadn't encountered Kevin's cold side yet and she would never want to confront it.