

"I'm glad to hear that. Now, eat," Rain said, sliding a bowl of food towards her. He sighed. Seeing her being so understanding and calm made Rain think that he might have worried too much earlier.

"Rain, can I ask you something?"

"Sure, fire away."

"What did you give them to make them agree to let me go?"

Tiana's heart ached a bit still. She had lived with them for more than twenty years after all. Her feelings and attachment towards them wouldn't disappear overnight.

"That's a thing of the past. Don't think about it anymore. Just relax. You're always welcome here," he replied, averting his gaze.

"I don't want to be a bother," she said faintly. Tiana heard that Rain and Annie were going to have a wedding. It would be inevitable that they would want to get some time alone. On top of that, she didn't want to get in the way as they started their family

"What are you talking about? You won't be. This house is big enough for all of us. It would be a waste if no one occupies any of these empty rooms," he reassured her. Just then, a car was pulling up in front of the driveway. 'That must be Annie,' Rain thought. He stood up from his seat to meet her and the kids.

"Thank you, Rain," Tiana said politely. The usual spoiled and haughty tone of hers was gone. It was as if she had matured overnight.

"Don't mention it," he replied. "Annie and the kids are back. I'll just go meet them." He walked up to the front door with long, quick strides. He gave the knob a turn; Joyce and Huey were already there, waiting with big smiles on their faces.

"Daddy!"

"Hi dad!"

The kids ran straight into Rain's arms as soon as they saw him. An overwhelming warmth flooded through Rain. He beamed back at them, kneeling down to give them a tight hug.

"Hey there! Did you miss daddy?" Rain gave them both a big kiss on the cheek.

"We did. And daddy, Huey made a girl cry today," Joyce said, suppressing her giggles.

"Oh, really now? Huey, why did you do that?" Rain asked seriously. He had high regard for the children's education -- not only at school; it was important for him that they were taught the right value.

"I didn't! She wanted to play with me and I didn't want to play with her, so she cried," Huey answered defensively.

"Oh, I see... But she is your classmate. Why didn't you want to play with her?" Rain asked, his voice lighter. He suddenly understood Huey better after thinking it over. Huey rarely even talked with his sister, let alone other girls. In spite of that, Rain s n so, we could only help her for a while. What about next time? She's still a member of the family after all," Annie was worried. 'The Kes are really horrible!' she thought to herself.

"Oh, speaking of which, I need to apologize to you -- I traded the evidence of the scheme against you for Tiana's freedom," Rain said slowly. He looked at Annie, wondering how she would react.

"What? You found evidence? Was it really the Ke family who did it?" Annie had always had doubts about that car accident. It couldn't have been that simple and ordinary.

"Yes. Sorry that I made the decision without counseling you." Rain felt bad. Since Annie was the victim, it just seemed wrong that he chose what to do with the evidence and not Annie.

"Why are you apologizing?" Annie said with a smile. "I wasn't badly injured in the accident anyway. Since the evidence could be traded for Tiana's freedom, I think you made the right decision." Rain smiled back, sighing in relief. Either way, the car accident case had already been reported to the police. Right now, they just had to wait for the result.

"Thank you for understanding." Rain wrapped his arms around Annie and hugged her tightly. "But..." he continued, "there's one more thing."

"What is it?" Annie asked anxiously.

"Tiana is not daughter of the Ke family." Annie pulled away from Rain. She was more shocked by the news than Tiana had been.

"What? No way! Are you serious?" Annie's eyes widened, looking at Rain in disbelief.

"It's true. I have just found out about it," Rain didn't tell her, however, that it was the Mayfly that had confirmed the information. The Mayfly's existence was supposed to be confidential.

Chapter 1752 Nothing Had Really Changed (Part One)

"No wonder she looks so sad," Annie gazed around the garden, where Tiana and the kids were playing, brow furrowed with worry. She wondered whether Tiana would be able to survive the pain.

"Don't worry! Everything that happened is in the past, and she will be fine," Rain lowered his head to give Annie a slight kiss on her forehead.

"I hope so!" Annie wasn't so optimistic about that as Rain.

Due to circumstances, Tiana had come to stay at Rain's home as a temporary arrangement. In consideration of her low spirits, the company granted her leave for several days to deal with her mental crisis.

On the day of the wedding ceremony, Annie wore a wonderful wedding dress tailored specially by Leena, and she was surrounded by a halo of happiness.

Compared with Belinda's stunning wedding dress earlier, Leena had outdone herself with Annie's. It was decorated exceptionally well, and Leena had carefully sketched the contours and seen to the creation of every stitch. It was a gorgeous realization of every little girl's fairy tale dream.

"Leena, wow, what a good job! Your wedding dress designs are becoming increasingly beautiful," Belinda said trying to hide her envy. The wedding dress Annie was wearing was certainly much more beautiful and exquisite than her own wedding dress had been.

"Belinda, if you ever get married again, I will design a new one for you," Leena blurted out without even thinking. She was, in that moment, unaware of the repercussions that her ill-considered words would have.

"Leena, come say that again, to my face!" Duke's cold voice cut through their chat suddenly, and he glared at Leena with a frosted light in his eyes. He hadn't imagined she would go so far as to instigate her elder brother's wife to marry once again. Did she consider what kind of a situation her elder brother would be in then?

"Yikes! Dear brother, I was just teasing. Please don't let my silly words upset you. I'm just talking trash!" Leena quickly covered up, sticking her tongue out in jest. She thought, 'Gosh! I really sent myself to the gun now.'

"All right. Duke, Leena doesn't mean anything by it. Please, don't be angry with her," Kevin explained when he noticed Duke's anger, and the tension of the situation. But he need not have worried, as Duke loved his sister very much, and could not remain angry with her.

"Kevin, set your heart at rest! His dear sister is the last person he would remain angry with. So, let's just relax and enjoy the ceremony!" Belinda had nothing more to say about the matter. She knew that no further words were required, as their flustering was due to them caring so much for each other.

"You know me quite well. Better than I know myself, it seems," Duke said. He had a vision of her, but also cold at the same time, having known so little about her.

It was said that his mother had always lived a rough life. So, when she had met Sanford, she had finally been pushed to the brink of abysmal destruction.

She had died before she had enjoyed even one day of a happy life. From then on, he had been alone, separated from his mother forever.

"What are you thinking about?" A pair of soft hands encircled his waist from behind, and her face snuggled up to his broad back.

"Sorry. Did I wake you?" he asked while turning around to hold her in his arms. Then he carried her back into the room. It was cold outside, so he was afraid that she would catch a cold in her light bedclothes.

"I couldn't sleep without you by my side," Annie felt his genuine warmth and commitment in his concern for her well being.

"I'm sorry for waking you up!" Rain transferred her directly back to bed, and slipped under the covers with her.

"It's all right. Were you thinking about your mother just now?" Annie knew that the early loss of his mother had always been a deep wound in his heart; so, it was natural for him to recall her on such an important day as his wedding.

"Hmm! How about visiting her grave with me someday?" Rain suggested. He considered that he had been undutiful for not introducing Annie and their children to his mother yet.

"Okay. She is my mother too, now. I heard that she was very pretty when she was young, right?" Annie asked in a soft voice while resting her head in the crook of his arm.

"Yeah, but who told you that?" Rain was surprised, because he had never mentioned that to her before.

"Leena told me. She said that she had seen mommy's photos," she knew he was still mourning her, but from now on he would not be alone. He now had his wife by his side.

"That girl...again" Rain smiled silently upon hearing of Leena's involvement once again. In the past, Leena had been the only woman to know his sorrows, but now he had Annie to share his joys and sorrows with.

"Yeah, it was she who told me. I feel that she is like a treasure trove, in which there are many wonderful gifts not yet known by others," Annie felt that she liked Leena more and more as time went by. Leena was ever optimistic and had a positive life outlook, which made her easy to get along with, and a good friend to Annie.

"Yeah! That's why we all treasure her so much," Rain sighed slightly. He thought that Kevin had won her heart so easily. If he had not acted without their knowledge, then they would not have let him marry Leena so easily. Since they cherished her so much, no one would ever be considered good enough for her.

"I see," Annie realized that Leena was actually the link between Rain and his companions, and she helped these men maintain their friendship. It seemed that they could get along with one another particularly harmoniously, as long as Leena was together with them.

"Let's go to sleep. It's late," Rain gave her a lingering kiss on the lips before he closed his eyes, still cradling her in his arms. Tomorrow would be another day. Their wonderful life together had just begun.

After the wedding, the Spring Festival would soon arrive. So, everyone, including Rain, became extremely busy with planning and business. Even so,

Rain did not forget to help Tiana investigate the identity of her biological parents.

When his cellphone rang, he had just concluded an executive meeting. He took the call while still walking.

"Hello, boss. What's up?" he asked while also taking a file from an employee that required his signature, and absently penning his name.

"I need to see you, immediately. Come over, I have some questions for you," Edward said brusquely. In his office, Edward had perused the documents in front of him with widening eyes. He found it difficult to believe what he was reading. Therefore, he needed to ask Rain some questions right now and in person.

"What happened? What is so urgent? Can I come to you this afternoon?" Rain found himself in a pickle as he noticed the time on his wrist watch, and he still had many meetings ahead.

"No, you can't. Come here right away," Edward didn't think he could wait until the afternoon with such dramatic news.

"Okay! I'll be there in half an hour," Rain said helplessly, hung up the phone, before dialing William and giving some instructions before leaving for Edward's office.

As soon as he arrived at the FX International Group, he immediately took the elevator to the top floor and Edward's office.

"Edward, what on earth is the matter? What is so urgent that I had to drop everything and come here right now?" Rain asked. Exhausted, he threw himself down You're right. She treated Tiana quite well in the past, though she has been cruel to her recently," Rain was suddenly uplifted by Edward's words. After all, it was he who benefited from the news. He had a sister now.

"It's good for you to think this calmly, but why didn't you mention that your mother had a girl child before, to us?" Edward asked the question again, as he was surprised that Rain hadn't said anything about having a sister before, and he was still struggling with its implications.

"Do you think it is necessary that I mention everything from my past?" Rain's mind was in a state of contradiction. He was both excited and sad. He felt excited because his younger sister turned out to still be alive; while he felt sad because his mother had died because of a vicious scheme that had broken her heart when she had still been so very young.

"Yeah. Then, do you have any plans?" Edward didn't think Rain would leave the matter at that.

"What plans can I have? Tiana has broken off all relations with the Ke Family; so, considering the fact that they have raised Tiana for more than twenty years, I won't call them to account, as long as they don't make trouble for us, for the time being. But if they are not sensible, I will destroy them completely," Rain spoke calmly about his options after a moment's contemplation.

"Wow! You've matured a lot, to be able to think so calmly and logically," Edward could not help but applaud, liking Rain's idea. After all, most often there was nothing more valuable than a family union.

"That's enough! Don't make fun of me," Rain said. Since he had believed that Tiana was the daughter of the Ke Family, there was no real change in his affection for her, now that he knew she was actually his own sister. After all, the only difference was her mother, but her father was still Sanford Ke. It was easy for Rain to accept the fact, as nothing had really changed.

"I'm not making fun of you. You used to be such a jerk. You've changed a lot since you got married," Edward said as he picked up the papers from his desk. He was about to go to the army base in a little while, so he was in a bit of a hurry.

"Well, thanks." Rain thought he could forego the modesty since Edward rarely praised him.

He nodded and gave a little smile. "Hey, read these documents. I'm going to the base now." He handed the documents over, grabbed his keys and headed out the door. It looked like he would leave without even waiting for a response.

"What? Are you serious? I have a lot on my plate right now," Rain had to make a point to refuse him.

"That's your business, not mine. Don't forget, you're still vice president of FX International." His tone was firm, and it didn't give Rain a chance to turn him down. Edward merely shrugged and left.

Rain groaned. 'I just found my own sister, ' he thought to himself, 'I should be heading back and celebrating right now...but Edward left me with all these documents.'

With a resigned sigh, he had no choice but to read the papers he was left with.

It was almost eight in the evening when he finished reading the documents. 'What a devil...' he quietly cursed Edward for the workload.

"What took you so long?" Tiana briskly walked down the steps as soon as she saw Rain. She missed him at the company, and found out through William that he was out on business.

"I had to do some overtime.

Where's Annie?" 'She looks so much like my mother, ' Rain thought as he stared at her. He used to hate her before, when he would mistake her for Sheena's daughter. He hadn't yet realized how much she looked like his mother.

"She and the kids went to Leena's house. They'll be back later."

Speaking of Leena, Tiana still felt guilty, thinking that Leena could've nearly had a miscarriage because of her.

"And you?"

Have you eaten yet?"

Rain figured that Kevin was out on a mission, or Leena wouldn't have called Annie and the kids over to her place.

"Yeah, I'm good. You haven't eaten yet though, have you?"

She frowned. She thought it was a little odd, the way R

"So if the results from the DNA tests match, that would prove I'm your sister?"

She asked, still recovering from shock of the news. If she was his sister, she would have a family. Wasn't that all she'd ever wanted? All she had ever hoped for?

"Yes... So, are you willing to come with me?"

He looked at her expectantly, but he knew he wouldn't push her if she didn't actually want to.

His eyes lit up when she replied, though. "Yes, I want to go."

Her words were heavy, as if she had just voiced out a life changing decision.

"Don't worry.

No matter what the results show, I'll treat you as my own sister." Rain had no habit of making such promises to others, but he was sure to keep those he made.

'Strike while the iron is hot, ' he thought. The very next day, the two went to get the DNA test. The waiting period was a strange time. Both of them were in rather unstable moods, but they got along normally.

When they saw the result, it was exactly what they wanted to see. Tiana and Rain's DNA was a 99.9% match. She was his sister, his real sister. They shared blood.

He didn't know how to express his joy with words, so he enveloped Tiana in a sudden tight hug instead.

"Oh my god!

You're my sister! I actually found you...finally!" It felt like a huge weight was off his heart. He had a strong feeling that finding his sister was the greatest comfort he could ever imagine offering to his late mother.

Chapter 1755 My Own Sister (Part Two)

"Really? Am I really your sister?" She couldn't believe it as she saw it on paper. It took her everything to pretend to be calm the past few days, but she was full of a weird mix of anxiety and excitement. If she was his sister, then she had been treating the one who killed her mother as a parent for the past twenty years. It broke her heart to realize that she had been living with her enemy for most of her life.

"Yes. Are you happy?" He was smiling at her, and at the fact that he could finally bring his mother peace.

"Yes.

This means I'm not an orphan... I have a real family." She always wanted Rain to be her brother. She would think about it often, knowing that it was undoubtedly a mere fantasy. It was still so unreal to think that her wish came true that way.

"Silly girl, how could you be an orphan? You've always had us." He gently wiped her tears away. He never thought such a day would come, and he was brimming with the same emotions, but was always just much better at keeping them from surfacing.

"Yes, I have you, so I'm not an orphan," she repeated.

With a brother like him beside her, she felt like she could get through anything.

"We're officially family now. You can ask anything you want from me. You never need to hesitate or be shy about anything ever again." The confirmation of their relationship did change his attitude towards her a great deal.

After the reveal of Tiana's identity, pretty much everyone accepted it happily, even if they were surprised at first. Their attitudes towards her also changed. After all, she was Rain's sister now.

Rain said he wanted his mother to meet Annie, so he took his family to the cemetery before the holiday.

Annie made sure to get all dressed up. Even like this, it was her first meeting with Rain's mother, and she wanted to make a good impression.

"Mother, are you there?"

This is your daughter-in-law. Your grandchildren are also here.

"I'm sorry I didn't bring them to see you before today." He was doing well to make sure his voice didn't crack, but he was getting quite emotional. It was the first time he was so happy in front of his mother.

"And this... is Tiana. Do you think she looks familiar?"

He reached out to pull her closer.

"Doesn't she? This is my sister, mom. Your own daughter. Over twenty years ago, she didn't pass away, s on who had nothing to do with him in his home.

"Because she's my sister!"

Do you understand now? The baby girl you brought back from the hospital is my mother's child. Shouldn't you at least act a little surprised? Do you really have no ounce of decency?" He appeared almost out of nowhere. As soon as he heard from the guard that Tiana had gone to meet Sheena at a nearby café, he rushed over, worried that Sheena would harm his sister.

"That's impossible! I didn't help that woman raise her baby! No...no, no! You're lying!"

She started shaking her head, almost hysterically. The words were all arrows to her heart.

"I'm not lying. We've done the DNA testing. It's official." Rain found himself particularly pleased to see Sheena out of control. Before, he said that he would act as if nothing had happened, so long as they didn't do anything stupid to provoke him. Sheena, however, repeatedly walked the dangerous line of challenging him.

"Don't lie to me, asshole! You're lying! I won't believe you. Tiana was an unwanted baby girl! She's not your mother's bastard!" She felt sick at the thought. So she had been taking care of her rival's child all that time? "Oh my god! You can't do this to me," she muttered into the empty air.

"Bastard? Look at your sons. They're the bastards here! They'll kick you straight out when you have no more use for them." He smiled a dangerously cold smile. He received word that her two sons were looking for someone to value their house, meaning they were going to sell it without any concern for their mother.

MY WIFE IS AN ALOOF BEAUTY

Chapter 1756 A Pregnancy Test (Part One)

"Don't be ridiculous. Both of my sons are good boys. What you just described would never happen," Sheena said confidently. However, her quivering voice betrayed her guilty conscience. Her sons might treat her well, but her daughters-in-law would definitely not.

"Time will tell. It always does, be it right or wrong. Tiana, let's go," Rain said coldly, not even sparing a second glance. He wondered how Sanford would react when he came back home to see the house was gone. Would he go crazy and lose himself?

"Yeah. Let's get out of here," Tiana replied in agreement. Tiana walked to him playfully, but her expression was worried; a stark contrast to her movements. Although Sheena had a terrible temper, her father liked her nonetheless. When she heard that their house would be sold to settle their debts, anxiety gripped her heart.

"Stop. Wait a minute. Rain, isn't true that I raised your sister? Can't you show even a small amount of gratitude?" asked Sheena, stepping forward. She just couldn't accept losing her daughter and fortune at the same time.

"Haha! I should be grateful? Why should I do that? What do you want, Sheena? Money? That greed of yours drove my mother to her death and caused many more troubles. I fucking hate you," answered Rain, not even looking back. His teeth were grinding in anger. His fingers slowly came together and clenched into a fist, but he restrained himself to the best of his ability, just enough to keep him from punching her face. Sheena didn't deserve any gratitude from him.

"Why blame me for your mother's demise?" asked Sheena. She was quite taken aback. Her lips transformed from a vicious snarl to a pout that conveyed her annoyance.

"Why shouldn't I blame you? Didn't you do everything wrong? Do I have to list down all the crimes you committed one by one?" Rain said solemnly. Finally he turned around, his eyes closed in deep t sorry. I promise this won't happen again," said Tiana apologetically. Her head was downcast. Tiana thought it was okay since Sheena only asked that they should get some coffee together. She never expected any danger from her.

"Remember, we humans are dangerous and treacherous. Don't trust anybody so easily, even Sheena. Are we clear?" Rain asked. He feared for Tiana's safety. A cornered animal might do something desperate, such was the case for the Ke Family.

"I won't forget. You're the boss, brother," replied Tiana. Tiana felt intense remorse for what she did. Rain looked really worried about her, and this wasn't the first time she let him down.

"Don't ever forget. It's your life we're talking about." She had lived with the Ke Family her whole life, and she probably had never noticed their true nature. This didn't guarantee her safety around them, either.

"I will never meet them again. I promise." Tiana reaffirmed her brother. As long as he had his peace of mind, she would do everything he wanted.

"Good girl. Now go home. I have dinner plans tonight. You can dine with my wife back at the house." The CY Technology Company was barely getting by. He needed to attend various parties to gather connections and sweeten relationships.

"Okay. I got it. Don't get drunk again," Tiana warned. She frowned when she knew that Rain's wife would worry greatly about him if he failed to come back home on time. He got drunk two times last week!

"Trust me. I know what I'm doing. If I ever get drunk again, my wife would lock the door and throw away the key!" Rain said, laughing awkwardly. This was partly true. He didn't want to rely solely on the huge power and reach of the FX International Group. He was working really hard these days. He had made strides, but he still needed to be alert.

"Be careful, bro! I'm going home now. See you later, 'kay?" said Tiana with her sweet smile as she waved farewell. Then she opened the car door and smoothly climbed inside.

"Okay. Drive safely!" Rain closed the car door for her and stood there until her car pulled away far enough that he couldn't see it anymore. He then turned around and entered the company's main building.

That night, Rain got home drunk again. William, his ever-faithful secretary, sent him home. When Annie saw her husband in a drunken stupor, she couldn't help but worry.

"Rain, why did you get drunk again?" Annie asked, her brows furrowed, hands on her waists. She knew she couldn't trust Rain to hold his liquor. He got drunk anyway.

He looked at his wife, smiling mischievously. "Oh, hey honey! Why are you still awake?" asked Rain slowly. Rain was still amazingly conscious, even when he drank tons of wine at the dinner. When he saw Annie, he got up and dragged himself to kiss her.

"Here I am waiting for you to come home. You don't need to work so hard. You've done enough!" pleaded Annie. She felt sorry for her husband. Rain had refused all outside help and was determined to start from scratch. He was so sure that he would succeed in building his own new world.

"I'm fine, okay? You know I'm doing all er the Spring-Festival holiday, CY technology finally made some progress. Enough to give Rain a breather and he finally could spend some time with his family.

Sheena's house was sold for half its original price, just as Rain predicted. The Ke Family faded into obscurity.

"Rain, is this what you wanted to see?" Sanford looked like he aged decades. When he came back home, he found that his ancestral home wasn't his anymore.

"I have no idea what you're talking about," Rain said innocently. He sat on his chair with his legs crossed. He took a sip of coffee and laughed without any emotion.

"My family has been ruined completely, you brat. Ever since you entered our lives, it was doomed from that moment." Sanford looked tired. He was resigned to the fact that he had no house to live in even after spending his entire life toiling and struggling.

"Don't you dare blame me for that. You know the reasons more clearly than the rest of them. You blamed me because you're too much of a coward to accept the truth. That's why you just decided it was much easier to blame me for your faults and miserable fate." Rain laughed at his father. He knew Sanford would never choose to help him. He was used to this kind of betrayal.

MY WIFE IS AN ALOOF BEAUTY

Chapter 1758 A Pregnancy Test (Part Three)

"What about Tiana? She is your sister, born of your mother?" asked Sanford. This fact was a great shock to him.

"Haven't you known all this ever since? Why would you ask again?" Although Rain knew he was adept in coping with new problems and unique challenges, he still was sad whenever something like this happened.

"Why didn't you tell me this before? I would have done things differently had I known," answered Sanford sadly. He was a pitiful sight. Sanford was a failure all his life. He never admitted this, since he was too much of a coward. He'd rather blame it all on other people and consider himself a victim.

"Do you really think that would have changed anything? Forget it. I won't mention anything about the past anymore. Don't even utter a word about the Ke Family anymore. I refuse to hear it. Goodbye!" Rain abruptly stood up, visibly annoyed. He felt it was too suffocating to talk to Sanford. He then turned around and walked out the door. If he remained even a minute longer, he would have lost his temper.

Sanford suddenly clutched his stomach and took deep breaths. He winced in pain and felt lightheaded.

"Sir! Are you okay? Where's your medicine? Just take your medicine and stop stressing yourself out." Lawrence hurried by his master's side to assist him.

He wondered when would the time come when his master could clear up those misunderstandings with Rain.

"I'm fine, Lawrence. God, I must have done something terrible in my past life for being punished like this." Sanford took off his thick prescription glasses and rubbed his eyes.

"Mr. Ke, one day Rain will see the truth and understand you. I'm sure of it." He sighed deeply knowing that he had no idea what to make of the relationship between his master and Rain.

"I hope so. Let's go." Their old house had been sold by his sons. Luckily, Sanford secretly bought a villa a few years ago. If he hadn't, he would be homeless now.

"Don't worry, Sir. Everything will be okay."

ple of days. He had been trying really hard for their second baby.

"Tell me what happened." Daisy bent down and picked up the pregnancy test. She showed it to her husband. She was glaring furiously.

"What's this?" asked Edward innocently. One part of the pregnancy test stick showed two lines. He wasn't Tom who was an excellent doctor. So he was naturally confused.

"It's a pregnancy test, you jerk!" Daisy shouted. Her eyes welled up. She thought Edward was playing dumb.

"Pregnancy test?" Edward looked even more confused. Then, it hit him. He felt a surge of excitement and asked loudly, "Are you pregnant?"

"Edward, did you do this on purpose?" Daisy bit her lips as she desperately held her tears back, to no avail. Tears streamed down her face. How could she get pregnant at such a crucial time? A military exercise was fast approaching and she needed to be there.

"Honey, why are you crying?" All throughout their marriage, Daisy had always been the tough one. He couldn't stand seeing his wife cry. It always came as a shock to him to see his soldier wife crying so helplessly. He panicked and thought whether he had overdone it or not. If he told her that he really wanted another child right now, Daisy would absolutely refuse him. So he had to take that chance. Unexpectedly, Daisy cried.

Chapter 1759 Sweet Scene (Part One)

"Whatever, Edward. You should resolve the problem you've created," Daisy said. It would have been fine if Edward hadn't asked the question. But now that he did, she felt more aggrieved -- this year was going to be the busiest time for her, and there would be a big move coming in.

"Yes! Leave it up to me. Don't worry! I'll take care of our new baby." Edward assured. He was completely immersed in the happiness of Daisy's pregnancy and noticing nothing unusual.

"You'll take care of it? Then why don't you conceive a baby?!" Daisy yelled. She wasn't a commanding Senior Colonel at this moment, but a reckless shrew.

"If I could do that for you, I would do it," Edward said, trying to console her. He badly wanted a little cutie as pretty as his wife.

"Easy for you to say..." Daisy said. She didn't take it to heart because she thought he was just saying it for show. She never expected that Edward would take any real action. She was not prepared for this.

"I know. What if we just sit on it for a while? That way, we would reach some compromise," Edward said. As long as he could get her to say yes, he might do everything she told him to do -- even if she asked him to bark like a dog.

"You, you....." Daisy was choked up with anger and was unable to say anything else. All she could do was stare at him with burning eyes as she ground her teeth.

"All right. Honey, don't be mad. Just think about it! How wonderful it would be if we have a daughter as beautiful as you are," Edward said, wiping the tears that were forming at the corners of Daisy's eyes. He understood how serious the situation was. Making her cry was the last thing he wanted.

"How do you know our baby's a girl? What if it's a boy?" Daisy said, knocking his hand away from her face. 'Who does he think he is? He thinks he can decide the gender of the baby for himself just like that? No, why should I even be affected by him?' Daisy thought.

"No way. It must be a girl..." Edward said. He was dumbfounded as he had never thought until then that that was a real possibility. Either way, he still stuck to his own credence.

"I'm tired of arguing with you. No matter what happens, you must give me an acceptable solution when I get back from work," she sniffed. If she could, she would have beaten up this self-righteous man who was in front of her.

"Hold up! Let's go to see Tom and ask him to check if you really are pregnant," he quickly said. Edward couldn't wait to get a definitive answer.

"Humph! Do you think I have time for ly wanted. But whenever he questioned himself, the answer was always yes.

"I won't stay even you want me to," Edward said and then left, frivolously and flamboyantly.

"Humph!" Tom said, pouting. He always used self hypnosis to tell himself that nothing happened whenever he faced such an arrogant boss. If he didn't, he might have died with anger.

Compared with Edward's fairly positive mood, Daisy was prone to emotional outbursts. She didn't think it was good timing to have another baby. This year, she would be busy with not only the national parade, but also several large-scale live-fire exercises. She couldn't be absent from any of them. So she was wondering if she should keep this new baby. What should she do if she decided to keep it?

"Daisy, what's the matter with you today? Why do you look anxious? Do you know what a big mistake you've made?" Kevin said, frowning. Although he was reluctant to say this, he had to criticize her for the sake of safety.

"Sorry! Major General, I need a break." Daisy said, pursing her lips, and then rushed out of the training field.

"Mark, what's wrong with your Senior Colonel?" Kevin asked, frowning. 'Did I talk to her too harshly?' he thought.

"I don't know, Major General. She has been like this since this morning," Mark replied. He felt very aggrieved at being named because he knew nothing about this.

"Okay. Follow her to check what's happening!" Kevin ordered, sighing slightly and thoughtfully.

"Yes, Major General," Mark said, saluting before going after Daisy.

Daisy took off her feldmutze and fanned herself with it. Summer was approaching, so the weather of S City was getting very hot and dry.

Chapter 1760 Sweet Scene (Part Two)

"Senior Colonel, here is some water," Mark showed up in front of Daisy at the right time. He passed his water bottle to her. As a guard, it was his responsibility to keep an eye on her and know what she needed.

"Mark, the whole troop will head to the exercise base this afternoon. Are you ready for this?" Daisy asked, taking several gulps of water. She wiped the sweat on her forehead with the back of her hand.

"Senior Colonel, I'm ready." Mark reported. He felt Daisy was acting a little weird today, so he behaved more cautiously.

"Good job. You can go now! I want to be alone for a while," Daisy said, giving back the water bottle to him. She thought it was necessary for her to think about how to deal with her pregnancy issue.

"Yes, Senior Colonel!" Mark said, looking at Daisy worriedly. Without much of a choice, he followed Daisy's order and left.

Daisy sat down on the grass, looking up at the blue sky and white clouds above the army base. She didn't notice anything unusual, but for some reason, she felt sadder than before.

She knew Edward wanted a daughter and that Justin wanted a sister. She would definitely have considered it if only they had talked it through first and made proper preparations. But never like this -- like she was forced and a passive participant.

She sighed slightly, wondering what Edward would say to her if she decided to get rid of the baby. She always subconsciously tended to put the country first before family or anyone else.

Some people might say she was cruel. Truthfully, she was the one who would suffer the most when it came to this kind of thing. After all, no mother would ever dislike her own child. Even though the new baby wasn't fully formed yet, it was already a life inside her.

In the afternoon, the troops were ready to ship out. Even though it was only a warm-up for the formal military exercise, nobody took it lightly. As a brilliant soldier, he or she should be ready to serve the country anytime.

Daisy didn't tell Edward about her attending the military exercise. She wanted to tell him about it this morning, but she was so annoyed with the whole pregnancy ordeal that she forgot about it. Edward had been waiting at the door of the army base for more than an hour. Eventually, he figured that something was wrong. No matter how many times he called Daisy, she wouldn't pick up. He decided to call Mark and Kevin, only to find out that their phones were turned off. In desperation, he called Leena, hoping that she might know what was going on.

"Hi Edward, what's the matter?" Leena ans you know it?" Justin replied, looking scornfully at Edward. 'It's so simple! Why can't he understand?' he thought.

"All right! It was kind of my fault. But did your mom say when she'll come back?" Edward asked, his voice masked with a hint of agitation. He walked up to the living room and slumped back onto the couch. He suddenly felt weak and burned out.

"She didn't say when. But, daddy, why do you care so much?" 'He always cares about mommy whenever she goes out for a mission. But why does he look so nervous this time?' Justin thought.

"She's my wife. Of course I care about her!" Edward said, staring at Justin angrily. He felt his son had become more difficult to deal with recently.

"Oh! Okay. You just relax here, Daddy. I go upstairs." Justin said with a sly smile. He didn't want to waste his precious time on hearing his daddy's rants.

"Wait. One more question," Edward stopped Justin who was already at the foot of the stairs. He couldn't be alone there! Edward felt that he needed someone to be with right now.

"What is it? Come on. I can tell you all," Justin said, sitting on the couch next to Edward. He was just a little kid, but he behaved like an arrogant king.

"If I tell you your mommy is having a baby, do you want it to be a sister or a brother?" Edward said expectantly, his eyes shining with curiosity.

"I never do baseless assumptions. But if mommy is having a baby, I hope it's a sister. It will be okay too if it's a brother. In that case, I wouldn't be too tired when I take over the FX International Group," Justin said. He would have definitely said he wanted a sister if he was asked years before. But he didn't want a sister so much ever since Joyce showed up.
