Chapter 455: Chapter 455: I Wont Bite You (part two)

"You should go with her! It's fine. Don't worry, it won't take long." Edward felt a little odd. He wondered, why his little boy wasn't scared of anyone except Leena? Leena was sweet and adorable. Then why was she so frightening in Justin's eyes?

"But... Fine!" Justin had no alternative but to let go of Edward's hand. He pouted to show his reluctance. He took a look at everyone but failed to find anyone who was about to save him from the impending misery. He felt very disappointed. He looked down gloomily and gave an unflinching expression.

"Let's go! Little buddy. I won't bite you. What's more, I'm not interested in human flesh, let alone your flesh which is probably mixed with ink." Leena moved her eyebrows at Justin complacently. Justin was not the only option she had. She insisted on taking Justin with her because no one else would offer to accompany her now that she had asked Justin to go with her. After all, they doted on her so much that they would never allow her to go alone. But she would be unwilling to be with anyone else now. So she had to pick someone in advance instead of waiting for their offer. Otherwise, she would be really annoyed if someone of them accompanied her.

Justin twitched the corners of his mouth. Finally, he decided not to say anything in response. Any normal person would not be interested in human flesh unless he had lost his mind. So should he respond her, no matter what he said as the response, it seemed that there would be only one conclusion; he was not a human being. Come on! He hadn't lost his mind! He was clever and he would never fall into her trap.

"Tell me! Why do you want me to go with you? And please don't say its because you like me. It's not convincing at all." As soon as they walked out of the ward, Justin asked about it. He didn't believe that the little witch had suddenly changed her evil ways and stopped digging a pit for him.

"Hey, little pal. You're just a baby boy! Why do you always think you might fall into some sort of a trap? Is it because the world seems too dark to you now? Or perhaps you are evil?" Leena reached out her finger and lightly tapped on Justin's head. It's not such a bad thing that this child was smart and sensible. But he would be not that cute and delightful if he was too wise. That would also make him less interesting, wouldn't it?

"Don't touch my hair. You're spoiling my hairstyle." Justin moved away to escape her reach. He was not a pet and he certainly didn't like being treated like one by Leena.

"So what! Your hair looks just like a messed up seaweed. You call this a hairstyle? Well, I beg to differ!" Leena sneered at him belittlingly. She found it really difficult to understand why her little nephew acted so cool. He was just a little kid! But his words and actions seemed too mature for his age.

Seaweed? How do you figure? What is the connection between my hair and seaweed? If I remember right, seaweed is green in color! I don't have a wife. Anyone with a decent vision can see that there's a vast difference between my hair color and the color of seaweed. Okay?" He, of course, knew what green hair meant. People would say a man was wearing a green hat when they knew he was being cheated on by his wife. Though he was a little boy, he was not foolish and got to know all of this from the shows on the TV. So there was no way Leena could make fun of him. No way!

Ur... Well... Puff..." Leena paused a little on hearing his words. Then she realized what he was talking about and she could not help bursting into laughter. She wasn't expecting that such a little boy would be so smart that he would be able to associate seaweed with green hat. He even knew what green hat meant. He really seemed like a grownup.

Why are you laughing? Did I say something wrong?" Justin felt a little embarrassed by her roaring laughter. He didn't know why Leena laughed and thought maybe he misquoted something to make her laugh like this. Perhaps, that's why she giggled so loudly that every passer-by looked at her with a weird expression on their face. But she didn't care about them and continued laughing. Her behavior was totally inconsistent with her ladylike dress.

"Ha-ha! Come on. I meant your hair is just like the short seaweed. It isn't long enough to form a hairstyle! I didn't think that our great visionary Justin is so imaginative that he'll figure out some deeper meaning hidden behind my words."

Leena struggled to stop her laughter. But she failed to hold back at the sight of Justin who looked like an old pedant. She didn't understand how he got to know all these grownup stuff. Wasn't he afraid that he might lose the innocence of a child if he knew too much about the adult world?

You deliberately misguided me! Huh! I know it, you have some cruel intentions behind asking me here. I can see the truth now!" Justin sharply moved forward with anger. He wanted to keep a safe distance from Leena so that she would not see his embarrassed face.

Hey! Buddy! Walk slowly! And why are you lowering your head almost to the ground? You will bump into somebody. That would be terrible." Fine! It was quite late! Justin had already bumped into someone in his mad rush. The man was none other than the man they were looking for, President Tom Qin.

Watch out. Why are you so careless?

Where are you going in such a hurry? Tom reached out and caught Justin who was about to fall when they hit each other. Tom frowned slightly and warned him in a low voice. He didn't mean to blame Justin ;he was just worried that Justin might hurt himself.

Sorry, Uncle Tom! We were looking for you. Justin was still in a state of mad fury. He decided not to accompany his evil aunt to do something anymore. Otherwise, he would again get teased by her.

Me? Why? What's the matter? Tom frowned slightly. He remembered that he didn't apply any medicine on Daisy's face and he was thinking about what corrective measures he could take. Hopefully, Edward wouldn't find out that Daisy was slapped in the face in his hospital. Tom was worried that even if he could erase inflammation on Daisy's face now, it was still too late and Edward had already got mad.

Chapter 456: Chapter 456: Do You Like Pain (part one)

"Tom, I was looking for you. Here!" Leena said and lifted her hand, pouting in a cute way. She reached out her wounded hand to show it to Tom.

"Oh! Damn. How could I forget about your wound? Come here! Let me help. Let's get you checked out and I'll change the dressing." Tom forgot about Leena's wound completely because he was busy with Edward's surgery. He couldn't remember there was still a little patient waiting for him until Leena came to him.

'But what's the matter with those people?' Tom thought to himself. 'Do they think that I have nothing better to do so they get injured one by one? And what's worse, each person is more wounded than the one before them. They should feel lucky that I am here. Otherwise, no matter how good I am or how effective the medicine is, it wouldn't help. After all, while the grass grows the horse starves.'

"Uncle Tom, do you have some medicine that hurts a lot but works really well for her hand?" Justin asked with sly eyes, showing his canine teeth. He said to himself while looking at Tom excitedly, 'You always make fun of me, Leena. Now I'll show you how it feels. Watch the true master at work!'

What? Are you worried about your aunt's wound? So you're asking for a good medicine for her now?" Tom asked, scratching his head and smiling. He knew very well about the rivalry between Leena and Justin although he didn't spend too much time with him. He had no idea what tricks this little boy was playing, but he was sure that Justin's advice wasn't out of real concern for his aunt.

Ya! I'm worried." Justin said cheerfully and didn't notice that his aunt, who was standing steps away, was staring daggers at him. It seemed as if the rage in her eyes was on the brink of explosion. If someone triggered her, there was no doubt that all the creatures around here would be dead, and not a blade of grass would grow.

Little boy, do you like pain? Huh?" Leena yelled at Justin between clenched teeth. 'Doesn't he know she is scared of pain?' she thought. It was okay if he didn't help her, but he even made things worse. Wasn't he asking for a beating?

"No. I was raised in a healthy home, so I don't have a sick soul. But it seems you're pretty familiar with it." Justin said. No way. He wouldn't be Edward's son if he didn't take revenge. If there was no opportunity to fight back, he would create one. He wouldn't lose. Couldn't lose. Like father, like son. How could he do any less for his dad?

"I'm normal. You really talk big. Are you sure you didn't fall out of the stupid tree and hit every branch on the way down?" Leena didn't understand why she would get so angry every time she saw Justin. 'Ordinarily, I don't offend him too much! I just use the kid as a shield sometimes. Does he need to be so resentful?' Leena thought to herself.

"Enough. You can stop now. I really can't stand that you two are stretching the truth too much here. Don't you need me to apply the medicine to you? Well. You can keep arguing. I'll show up when you're finished,"

Tom said and shook his head helplessly. He couldn't understand their behavior.

Tom said and shook his head helplessly. He couldn't understand their behavior. Neither of them was willing to make compromises and every word they said to each other was harsh. It seemed that both of them were the kind of people who hated to lose!

"Hmph!" Justin turned around and glared at Leena. The cool and aggressive look on his angry face was similar to Edward's, which made Leena feel that the little boy standing in front of her was just Edward, a small version of Edward.

"Little boy, you hold grudges. Not a good habit!" Leena didn't forget to make fun of Justin at the last minute. It was obvious that she was as unforgiving as Justin.

It was not as horrible as last time when Tom applied medicine for Leena. After all, most of the wound scarred, so she could hardly feel the pain. Justin felt unhappy with this, because he thought he could take this chance to laugh at her. To his surprise, he didn't even hear her cry once. He remembered that she cried out of pain last time. He wondered why it was different this time.

Leena looked at Justin from the corner of her eyes gleefully, with a big smile on her lips. 'This little boy wants to laugh at me.'

Leena looked at Justin from the corner of her eyes gleefully, with a big smile on her lips. 'This little boy wants to laugh at me. Humph!' Leena thought. She would not make his wish come true! Why she knew that? The reason was obvious and simple: They were the same type of people.

'Bah! What have you got to be proud of?' Justin thought. How could a woman, who wasn't as brave as a child, be shameless to behave so elated? She should still remember the tearjerker scene last time when she got scalded. Justin looked at Leena with a sneer and his eyes were filled with sarcasm. Leena was really pissed off at him. She was desperate to frustrate him again in case he spoke rudely to her. Her gaze said 'I dare you.' Although Tom was concentrating on applying medicine for Leena, he was quite clear that there was a secret war happening between Justin and Leena. One cunning woman with one cunning boy, who would come out on top? Of course it would be unwinnable. So Tom decided not to offend or provoke either of them because he didn't want them to gang up on him. Just let them be! He tended to sit on the fence at this.

With each one holding an idea in their heads, the whole procedure of applying medicine came to a perfect end. Having wasted too much time watching the war between Leena and Justin, Tom found that Luke, Belinda and Rain had been away when they returned to Edward's room. The three must have gone back home, Tom thought. Because they had seen the people whom they wanted to see and made sure that Edward was well, so they didn't need to worry too much. Besides, Tom, who was a medical genius, was Edward's surgeon, so they didn't have to stay there any longer. After all, air circulation was good for the patients health.

Chapter 457: Chapter 457: Do You Like Pain (part two)

"How is she? The wound on her hand has scarred, hasn't it?" Edward asked Tom with a smile, looking agreeable but more creepy in Tom's eyes. Tom was so scared to step into this. It might be a trap.

"Um! Yes, it has. I'm sure her wound will be healed faster if you put away your soft and enchanting smile." Tom replied, raising his eyebrow to Daisy as a signal to ask what was going on here. Tom felt like he was falling into a trap.

But Daisy couldn't figure out what he was getting at. With a confused face, she just replied Tom with a shrug and a helpless expression.

Oh! You do look guilty! So do you want to give me a good explanation now?" Edward asked, wiped the smile off his face and turned to Tom, with his deep and sharp eyes staring at him.

"I can make it up to you right now! Okay?" 'Oh my god!' Tom thought to himself, 'Daisy, you were so ruthless to have told Edward the truth already. I knew it was unintentional, but you are pushing me hard towards Edward. The man's a devil!'

"So tell me," Edward said, lifting the corners of his mouth and a smile playing across his lips. It was so dazzling that Tom couldn't help blinking his eyes, but he had no idea what that smile meant.

No, I can't," Tom replied listlessly, without any enthusiasm. He knew that his plan of having Edward pay the exorbitant price for the suite fell through right when he spoke those words. Instead of gaining huge profits, he even paid him his expensive labor. Think about it: If you were him, would you cheer up? "There's many a slip twixt cup and lip." Like the proverb said, everything was going wrong.

"Well... I think you know what to do now," Edward said with a faint smile on his face and thought, 'Very well. He is smart enough to realize his mistake so soon. It's worth it for me to act so harsh in front of him. He really underestimated me if he wanted to extort money from me!' Anyone should feel lucky if Edward didn't plan to set him or her up. Now someone tried to set up him. It was obvious that he was asking for trouble.

"Yes, I know. I will go back home to fetch the medicine right now." Oh... His money! His medicine! All of them were plundered by this unscrupulous and cunning Edward, leaving nothing to him. Tom thought. He blamed himself for learning this from Rain. He was clear that he couldn't be a match for Edward, but he offered himself to Edward to be abused again and again and never learned his lesson from it. He thought he was too stupid. He should have done some tricks to damage Edward's brain when he did the surgery for him last night. In that case, he wouldn't have had to worry about being robbed by him.

What are you talking about? Why can't I understand what everyone's talking about? And Daisy, what's wrong with your face?" Leena asked anxiously. She didn't notice Daisy's face until she stood close to her. No sooner were the words out of her mouth than Tom wanted to die. He regretted desperately and blamed himself for pursuing beauty as Rain did. If he hadn't pursued it, he would have avoided taking the medicine home. Then all these bad things wouldn't happen in quick succession.

Um! Mom, I also want to know." Actually, Justin wanted to ask about it at the beginning. As he was lectured by Daisy, he couldn't find a suitable chance to speak out. Now that Leena mentioned it, he took the chance to pursue this subject.

"Uh! Well..." Daisy turned to Edward for help with a pathetic look on her face. She had concocted a number of explanations for her face all day long. She thought she had avoided the nervous attention on her from Justin, but she couldn't anticipate that there was another person as curious as Justin. That was Leena. It was too sudden for her to cover up herself with a good excuse.

"It's fine. Not a big deal. She was just careless and hurt herself. Can you stop being curious now? Tell me! Did you get along well on the way back?" Edward said but shook his head helplessly when receiving the signal of help from Daisy. He had to distract their attention even though he knew his words would cause another war between Leena and Justin. But for the sake of his cute wife, he had no choice but to do so.

Yes." Justin gave a positive answer.

How could it be no?" Leena denied that she was so childish to fight with a child. Although, Justin's intelligence was similar to that of an adult, she was unwilling to be treated in the same way as Justin.

They answered in chorus. Although their time were different, they meant the same. This kind of harmony surprised Edward. Tom, the beautiful but aggrieved man who was just mistreated by Edward, rolled his eyes after hearing their replies. These two people were so shameless in front of him the witness, Tom thought. Or in their eyes, he was simply too weak to pose any threat to them, so they chose to neglect him?

Chapter 458: Chapter 458: All Is Fair In War (part one)

"Why do your answers sound so thin and unconvincing to me?" Edward was just starting to recover after the surgery, and he was still too weak to stay awake for a long time. All his friends came to visit him after work today, and after talking with them all, he began to feel tired again. His head got heavier and his smile was a bit stiff, as if he would fall asleep any second.

"Daddy, look at me! How could I ever lie to you? How could a liar have such a sincere and innocent look?" Justin hurried to explain himself as he ran towards Edward's bedside with a sweet smile. He grabbed Edward's arm and leaned forward to press his chubby face on Edward's, wriggling his little body like an excited puppy.

Don't lie, you little devil. Look at Auntie Leena, staring at you with a sharp glance. If her eyes could kill, you'd be dead a thousand times over. Are you sure you want to stick to your answer?" Edward smiled as he pulled Justin's little head closer and whispered in his ear, a hint of slyness flashing through his deep blue eyes.

What? No way! I'm not holding a grudge against her anymore; how could she be mad at me?" Justin immediately turned around. What he saw was that Leena was chatting with Daisy joyfully, blissfully unaware of anything else. She wasn't glaring at Justin at all! What did Edward say she was doing? The only conclusion Justin could come to was that his dear daddy had just played a prank on him. Justin was a clever boy, and he soon realized he'd fallen for daddy's joke. He turned again to Edward, who smirked confidently and winked at him, which confirmed his suspicion.

Daddy! You lied to me!" Justin pouted and pretended to be angry with Edward. He threw himself back to Edward's bedside to bury his face in his arm, and wriggled his little body again, as if he could shake all the embarrassment off in this way. Edward not only saw through Justin's lie, but also tricked him. Justin felt embarrassed all of a sudden, and he didn't want others to see his glowing pink cheeks.

"All's fair in war. What, little one? Who said that only you can trick me and I can't do the same thing to you?" Edward gently pinched Justin's adorable face and chuckled. Like father, like son. Justin might be as smooth and sly as Edward, but he was still a little boy. There was no way that he could successfully fool his father, at least not now. Maybe he would succeed one day in one, perhaps two decades. But not now.

"Mommy, look at daddy! He is bullying me!" Now that Edward had seen through his little trick, Justin felt a little awkward to keep playing cute and innocent in front of his father. However, he didn't want to be beaten by Edward like this, so he turned to Daisy for help.

"Nonsense. Your daddy is badly injured and lying in bed. How could he ever do anything to bully you or anyone else? He should be glad that people don't take advantage of his being injured and bully him instead!" Daisy didn't really know what happened between Justin and Edward, but she knew Justin said that because he was seeking comfort. So she simply blurted out some random words to comfort her son without thinking too much about it. However, when Edward heard what Daisy had said, he thought she was talking about something else. With a ghost of a smile on the corners of his lips, Edward narrowed his eyes while gazing at Daisy, 'Did she just doubt my ability?'

Sitting quietly beside them, Luke had no intention to join their conversation in the first place. He just wanted to be there and protect Edward. However, when he heard Daisy, he looked up at them in surprise. He glanced at Edward, and as expected, Luke saw the devilish smile on Edward's face. With deep sympathy, Luke turned his eyes to Daisy, who obviously had no idea what she had done and what kind of price she was going to pay for her words, even though she didn't mean them. Luke sighed heavily in his mind. As far as he knew, Edward wouldn't tolerate anyone doubting his ability, and Luke was sure that Edward would soon even the score by showing Daisy how wrong she had been.

"Woman, are you doubting my ability?" Luke was right. He grew up with Edward and knew him well. Although Edward was easy to get along with, he got aggressive and arrogant whenever people doubted what he was capable of.

"What? No... I didn't mean that." Startled by Edward's sudden question, Daisy paused for a second with confusion. She had no inkling what she had done to Edward that made him unhappy again this time. She was only chatting with Leena. Why was he staring at her in that freaky way?

"Haha! Sis, you did. We've all heard you. You just said that Edward was incapable of doing anything." Leena burst into giggles and quickly chipped into their conversation. Although she knew Daisy was merely comforting little Justin and she didn't mean it in a sexual way like Edward did, how could she waste such a show, especially when she was sitting on the front row seat! This was going to be so much fun, and Leena loved fun!

"But he is incapable of bullying anyone right now. Am I wrong about that?" Daisy had been in the military for too long a time. Due to the close-off management there, her daily routine was nothing but training and meetings. Therefore she was pure and simple in some certain ways, and she was especially slow when Edward flirted with her in a sexual way, because she didn't think things that way in the first place, like right this moment.

"Haha! Edward, I feel bad for you. Sis seems to be quite slow in such things. But it could be a good thing sometimes, couldn't it?" Leena's smile grew bigger as she thought that things were getting more and more interesting. She had always thought that Daisy knew everything since she was a fierce colonel. But Leena was actually surprised to see the confused look on Daisy's face for a change. It seemed that Daisy hadn't come to realize what they were talking about; the whole situation made Leena want to laugh out loud as she thought of how frustrated Edward must be feeling at the moment.

Upon hearing Leena's words, Tom's mouth twitched. Only Leena would dare keep provoking Edward when he was on the verge of exploding without worrying that he would get back at her later. Even if she irritated Edward, she was still his beloved little sister, and he wouldn't really get mad at her. Not for long anyway. Tom then thought of how miserably he had been treated as compared to Leena. Maybe things would be better if he were a girl. That way, Edward wouldn't punch him or take away his invaluable medicine, and he could get back all the money Edward owed him, including the price of the medicine and this VVIP ward.

Little girl, aren't you supposed to go home now? Edward retorted sourly as he squinted at the beautiful girl who laughed so hard that she couldn't even stand upright. Edward was a bit upset that Daisy didn't get the hint of his flirtation but Leena did, and she was making fun of both of them. As much as he adored Leena, Edward wouldn't allow Leena to stay and watch as he made a fool of himself. Therefore he pretended to put on serious face and drive her out.

I'm not in a hurry. Leena immediately saw through Edward's intentions. The show had just started, how could she drop it and leave now? No way! She intended to stay for a little while longer here with them. I don't have anyone to keep me company at home anyway, Leena thought to herself gloomily.

Chapter 459: Chapter 459: All Is Fair In War (part two)

But the next second, she was shocked by her own thoughts. What happened to her? Didn't she always enjoy being alone by herself? She could make her life fun on her own! How in the world did she suddenly get bored of the solitude that she had always been longing for? Where did the idea even come from?

Leena tried to sort things out in her mind. She believed that she only married Kevin because he promised her absolute freedom to do whatever she wanted to, and he wouldn't stand in her way. However, as time went by and she got to know him better, she started to change her mind. The freedom she desired for the longest time seemed less appealing to her at the moment. Leena was baffled, because she had no idea why she would suddenly feel like this.

"Jerry, aren't you going back to fetch the medicine? You can swing by and drive Leena home." Leena might be naughty sometimes, but Edward always had a way with her. They had known each other for many years, and as her big brother, Edward knew well enough as to when he should encourage her with a treat and when he should be firm.

Come on, Leena. We are both exiled by your dear brother Edward. Let's get out of here." Tom forced a bitter smile as he once again thought about the money that Edward should have paid him. Tom had planned to transfer Edward to this expensive VVIP ward so he could charge Edward a pretty penny even if he couldn't get back those invaluable medicines taken away by Edward; but it was likely that he would end up with neither the medicine nor the money. Depressed, Tom sighed heavily at the thought.

"I didn't say I want to go home now! Edward, how could you make decisions for me without even asking my opinion again? I don't like this! I'm not a child anymore; I can make my own decisions about what to do. I don't need you butting in and making me mad." Leena used the word 'again', because not only Edward, but Duke and the others would sometimes arrange things or even plan the life path for her beforehand. Because she was the only girl in the pack, they all treated her like their own beloved sister, a little princess. Besides, they were much older and experienced than she. It was natural that they would think that they knew better to arrange whatever they thought would be the best for Leena. And Leena never had a say in it, because what they did was for her own good.

To be honest, although Leena couldn't say anything against her brothers, she really didn't like it when they did things for her without even asking what she wanted or how she wanted things to be. She understood that their actions were out of concern and love. However, she also felt depressed since her opinions seemed like nothing to them, as if they didn't care about how she felt or whether she was happy. She had been trying to figure out what she felt about Kevin lately, and today she was extremely upset because of that. She didn't want to go home because she didn't know how to face Kevin at this point.

Leena might be naughty and mischievous, but she wasn't unreasonable and she never made a fuss out of nothing. She loved to have fun, but she never crossed the line by joking with something as important as a matter of life and death. She enjoyed tricking others, but she knew when to stop before she went too far. She knew she was wrong by tricking Belinda into marrying Duke with some dirty tricks, but they fell in love with each other in the end. It made her feel less guilty to see them happily together. Now that Edward had dropped the last straw by ignoring her wish to stay here with Daisy and everyone, and directly asking Tom to drive her home. It felt like all the emotions she had been suppressing suddenly broke out, and Leena retorted sharply before she could realize. She didn't mean to be rude or aggressive; she was just stressed out. As soon as she finished speaking, Leena was also shocked by what she had just said. She covered her mouth with her hands, her eyes wide open with horror. A short moment later, she hurried to apologize,

I'm sorry, Edward. I'm so, so sorry. I got a little emotional. Tom, let's go." Before Edward could say anything in return, Leena forced an apologetic smile at Daisy and strode towards the door without waiting for Tom.

Daisy, I'm leaving for a while. I'll tell the doctors and nurses to be more careful and stay alert while I'm gone. Call me if there's anything." Tom nodded at Daisy and checked the data on the screens of various monitoring instruments around Edward's bed before leaving. Instead of chasing after Leena, Tom found the staff assigned to look after Edward and told them to pay more attention to Edward's condition. Then he ran after Leena.

"What happened to Leena? She seemed strange. She wouldn't normally talk to you like that," asked Daisy with a frown as she gazed at Leena's figure disappearing behind the door. Daisy was surprised at Leena's sudden outburst. Because of the unexpected episode, she had completely forgotten that Edward was somehow angry with her a few minutes ago.

"I'm not sure. Maybe she's on her period." Although Edward answered casually, he actually felt like there was a huge tornado sweeping around his heart. He had known Leena since she was a little girl, but he seldom saw Leena act like this. There must be something wrong and she must be upset, otherwise she wouldn't have talked to him like that. But what could be wrong? Did she find out about Kevin's feelings for Daisy? Edward suddenly had a really bad feeling; he hoped he was only overthinking it. After all, it was true that Kevin liked Daisy, and Daisy was Leena's favorite sister. Edward couldn't imagine how Leena would feel or what could he do to help after she found out.

Eager to leave the hospital, Leena was striding so fast that Tom had to run after her to catch up with her. Tom grabbed Leena's unharmed hand, and with a sudden burst of strength, he pulled Leena into his arms. He gently patted Leena's back as she buried her face in his warm chest.

Leena, what happened? Is something wrong? You seem really upset. Why did you talk to Edward like that? It's okay, you can tell me," asked Tom softly as he slightly pushed Leena off of his arms. He reached out his long fingers to raise her delicate jaw, but his heart stopped when he saw the tears in Leena's eyes. The sorrow in her watery eyes bruised Tom's heart all of a sudden. Worried, he frowned.

I'm sorry, Tom. I didn't mean it. Is Edward mad at me? How could I ever talk to him like that? He's injured, and I shouldn't have been rude to him. Will he be alright?" Leena sniffed as she spoke between sobs. She felt so ashamed of herself for throwing her tantrum like a baby still in diapers. Edward had just been through a brutal gunshot wound and surgery, and he just woke up not long ago. She should tried her best to make him happy so he could get better soon. However, she just lost her temper and said something really harsh and rude to him. Leena felt so guilty and worried ;she wondered whether Edward would get upset because of her words, and his recovery would suffer for it. Then she would be the one to blame.
