“Isn’t your father a rich man? Why didn’t he look after this daughter?” Largo asked. With that, Avery noticed how Largo was unusually interested in anything related to Skylar.

“He did,” She told him. “Until he gave up. After letting her into our home, she always brought strangers over every two to three days. Who could handle this sort of disrespect?” However, Largo was a little disappointed, as Skylar seemed to have become more reserved.

Otherwise, she would not have ignored his invitation to come over to his room. If it was a few years back, would it be Skylar laying in bed with me right now instead of Avery? Too bad she’s famous now and has to be cautious about what she does.

Back at Skylar’s room, she opened up the now cold braised chicken rice and handed the spoon to Tobias. “Eat up for now. I’ll treat you to something good tomorrow. I have money now.”

Skylar felt delighted as she knew she would receive a large sum of money once the filming concluded. It would be enough for her to invest and snowball her wealth.

She wanted to buy a small house of her own.

Meanwhile, Tobias kept quiet, not wanting to burst her bubble.

Right before he took the spoon from Skylar, there were knocking on the door, catching her off guard. She panicked as there were the police at the door.

“Do you want to hide first?”

“Am I that unsightly? Why do I need to hide?” Tobias gave Skylar a cold stare.

“The crew has a lot of people in it. Most importantly, they can’t keep their mouths shut.”

Skylar replied in a whisper. “If they found out about you and me, the news will spread for sure. Aren’t you the one who wants to keep our relationship a secret? You don’t want paparazzi bothering you, right?”

With that, Tobias let out a sigh and put down his spoon. He then went into the washroom and pulled the curtains over him.

The design of the room was rather strange as the washroom was beside the bed, and the walls were all tempered glass. Hence, Tobias would still be visible from the outside if he did not pull the curtains.

After that, Skylar opened the door to see Cassidy, who was crying throughout the day, and her manager, Sandra. Sandra had one arm on her waist, looking exceedingly intimidating.

“Ms. Jones, Cassidy is not in the right headspace now. And it’s all because of you calling her crazy on the internet. I know you’re signed under Royal Entertainment and have Kate behind your back supporting you. But don’t you go thinking that you can bully our artists.”

Sandra was very aggressive with the way she spoke, but Skylar could do nothing but stay quiet. After all, she was the one at fault.

“Maybe I can go on Twitter and say that I’m crazy as well? That way, I can atone for my slander towards Ms. Gardner. Will you be okay with that?” She backed down.

“I know you don’t like me. But as a public figure, how could you mock me like that? I cannot accept this humiliation. What have I ever done to you? Why do you treat me like this? Aren’t you afraid of going to hell?” Cassidy was still crying.

Skylar raised her head slightly. Isn’t she going a little overboard with this? Is hell that easy to get in?

“I wasn’t a public figure back then.” She pursed her lips. “And I have already apologized. If you can’t accept it, then tell me a better way to resolve this situation. I’ll do my best to comply.”

“I want you to apologize,” Sandra was extremely rude. “Not just verbally. I want you to live-stream your apology and bow to her, admitting your wrong-doings.”

Skylar chuckled when she heard their unreasonable request. “Why don’t I just get on my knees?”

“That works too,” Sandra replied while Skylar took a glimpse at the washroom with the corner of her eyes.

Is it soundproof? I never actually checked! She was worried because she did not want Tobias to hear what was going on.

Then, she smiled at the two women at the door. "I'm afraid I can't do that. Everyone has a keyboard at home. I wasn't the only one that said something bad about you. So why am I the only one being blamed? It's so obvious that you're trying to use me as a warning. Are you trying to tell the world that you would only accept praises and nothing else?" Cassidy took a step forward. "Apologize to me on Twitter then. You might not know how things work in this industry because you're new, but I'm your senior, so people might say that I didn't take good care of you." At that moment, Skylar was gritting her teeth, trying hard to force her voice out. "I'll only accept solutions that are behind closed doors. A public apology does nothing for me and will affect my image as a whole. Do you think I'd do that?" Meanwhile, Tobias heard everything from inside the washroom. It's lively out there. These women are getting louder and louder as they speak, and there's even someone crying. "You shut your trap, you bi! Show some respect! Don't go assuming that everyone's going to put up with your sh*t just because you're the main character!" Cassidy exclaimed. What she said was way nastier than calling someone crazy.

On top of that, Skylar never liked her after hearing how Cassidy treated her fans from Kate. You even accepted a gift that your fan bought using the father's treatment fund for the chemotherapy. How much more pathetic can you be? Even now, you're still acting like you're weak and helpless, squeezing every bit of tear you have out for everyone to see. Do we live in a day and age where anyone who cry was considered the oppressed? I can't cry at all! Does that make me the vilest person to walk this earth? Skylar figured that Tobias most probably heard everything. She knew that Tobias would be disappointed to see her back down like that, as she remembered him telling her that innocent girls did not suit him. All of a sudden, there was a glint of sharpness in Skylar's eyes. "Initially, I thought that we could sort things out peacefully. But seeing that you two are hell-bent on humiliating me, I've decided that an apology will no longer be an offer. I could tell the public that someone hacked my account. You're more than welcome to play this game with me." As soon as she finished, Sandra secretly stopped the recording that she had going on. All that she needed to do now was go back and edit it. Things will get interesting real soon. She reckoned that it was enough to destroy Skylar's career before it even took off. However, she was not doing this for Cassidy. It was more for Avery's mother, Irene, because they were close friends. Sandra could not sit still and watch as Avery's role was taken from her. Moreover, Irene had promised her a lot of benefits if she could find dirt on Skylar. All of a sudden, Cassidy's crying stopped, and her expression froze as Tobias appeared. No wonder the crying sounded so familiar. Tobias thought. "Long time no see, Ms. Gardner." He wore a chilly grin. When Cassidy snapped out of it, her face paled. Her hands covered her ears, looking as though she was having a mental breakdown.
