

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe chapter 56

–

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe Chapter 56

My mind was reeling with the information Kady had given me. She hadn't said it out right, but there was no need. Somehow, Garrett had planned for Melissa, Frank and I, to move here. Anger rushed through me, and I wanted to storm downstairs and demand answers. I stopped myself in time, knowing it would only place the blame on Kady. I needed to be smart about this. If I confronted Garrett all angry, he would certainly turn me down.

I grimaced as I walked downstairs, my duffel bag slung over my shoulder. If I could get a read on Garrett's emotions, I might know if he was lying or not. As it stood, the only people's emotions I could sense, were Alec and Kade.

Both the twins halted their glaring at Garrett to meet my eyes as I walked downstairs. My stomach fluttered as I met their dark, captivating eyes. I couldn't remember why I had left them in the first place, and knew I would never make that mistake again.

As I walked into the foyer, someone new stood next to Garrett. He had Garrett's stature and body type, but that was the only similarity between the two. Where Garrett and I had chestnut hair, the man had shaggy hair the color of wheat. His eyes were a deep shade of green, mixed with dark hues of brown and gold. They stood close enough together that I knew they were familiar with one another. I met the man's eyes and watched as he smiled at me, flashing a set of straight teeth.

“I apologize for strolling in unannounced.” The guy chuckled, ignoring Garrett’s irritated look. He walked over to me and held out a large, calloused hand. “Alpha Julian, I’ve heard quite a bit about you, Aurora.”

“Have you, now?” I asked warily, gripping Alpha Julian’s hand in my own. The man had a strange scent. I could tell he was a werewolf, but his scent also had a sharp edge to it.

“You gave these men quite the chase.” Alpha Julian chuckled, and for a moment, his face was lit like the sun. “Good to see you back in one piece.”

“Yeah. Well, I learned my lesson.” I internally cringed, flashing Alec and Kade an apologetic look.

“Good thing too.” Alpha Julian nodded understandingly, “Horrible thing, to lose your mate. Wouldn’t wish it on anyone. It was nice meeting you, Aurora, but it looks as though your mates are ready to head out. I’m sure we’ll meet again!”

“Ready to go, doll?” Alec asked, ignoring the sour look on Garrett’s face. Kade had a similar look of irritation as he glanced from Garrett to Alpha Julian.

“Actually, not yet.” I shook my head. I knew I was going to regret this, but I had to take a chance. Reading Alec and Kade’s emotions had to be the start of my abilities, and I needed to try and use them for answers. I turned to Garrett, seeing the surprise flash in his eyes as I talked to him in an even tone. “There’s still some things I’d like to ask you. We got off on the wrong foot, and I’m still far from trusting you, but you still have a place in my life. Could we come for dinner sometime this week?”

Alec and Kade's surprise felt like barbed wire, stinging my skin as it lashed me. Neither one was happy with my words, yet neither one spoke up. I had the sneaking suspicion they were trusting me, and showing me respect by not questioning me in public. I made sure to mention 'we' would be coming to dinner, as I knew Alec and Kade wouldn't let me step foot in this house alone. Garrett's mouth opened, then closed before he finally found the words to say.

"I would like that very much, Aurora." Garrett nodded, "Does tomorrow afternoon sound acceptable?"

"Sounds good to me." I nodded, turning to Julian. "It was nice meeting you as well, and you're welcome to join us for dinner. If Garrett doesn't mind, that is."

While I kept my face blank, I noticed the deeply etched look of irritation on Garrett's face as I invited Alpha Julian to dinner. I wasn't sure how the four of them knew each other, but I was bound to find out if Julian agreed to come to dinner. Garrett, Alec, and Kade's identical expressions confirmed my thoughts, none of them liked one another. This dinner might be a shit-show, but I was determined to get some answers.

"You're more than welcome to stop by, Julian." Garrett gave him a tight nod, one Julian noticed.

This chapter is provided by .com. Visit .com for daily update.

"Awesome! I'll see you tomorrow, Aurora." Julian smirked at Garrett and flashed me a quick wink before walking further into the house.

"I'll see you tomorrow." I called out, giving Garrett a short nod before walking out of the house with a very stiff Alec and Kade.

“Sweetheart, what the hell was that?” Kade asked the second we hopped in the car. I could feel the anger bubbling within him, but his words held no irritation.

“Trust me, having dinner with Garrett is the last thing I want.” I replied. “Kady told me something interesting when I went to grab my stuff. She said Garrett likes control, and that Melissa and I moved here for a reason. I thought that reason was a new job offer, but Kady made it pretty clear that a new job offer wasn’t the reason for our move.”

“You think Garrett brought you here?” Alec asked incredulously, shaking his head as he glared daggers at the house.

“I don’t know what to think, but I’m not putting anything past him.” I admitted. “If I can read both of your emotions, why couldn’t that extend to someone else? Wouldn’t it make sense that my abilities stem from one specific thing?”

“You would think so.” Alec nodded slowly, “Is that why you invited yourself to dinner? To try and read Garrett’s emotions?”

“Sure is.” I smiled sheepishly, “There’s no guarantee it’ll work, but I have to try.”

“You should practice before hand.” Kade frowned, brushing his dark hair from his face. “Tomorrow doesn’t give you much time to practice, better start today.”

“Sounds like a plan to me.” I nodded.

“Looks like we’re going to Garrett’s for dinner tomorrow.” Alec groaned, sitting back in his seat. Alec flashed me an amused look, “You do know were coming with you, right?”

“I figured as much.” I grinned at the two of them.

“How’d you figure that out, doll?” Alec snickered, leaning his chest against the back of my seat.

“I knew you’d both come, because I’d do the same for both of you.” I laughed.

The soft looks I received from Alec and Kade told me all of their emotions without the need of my strange ability. The three of us figured the best place to practice would be in town. Kade took us to the park in the center of town, a place I had only ever admired from the short drive it took to reach their house. The park consisted of a large feild, with a few benches, flower bushes, and lamp posts. Children ran in the feild laughing, some with bubble wands in their hands. Alec, Kade and I sat on one of the empty benches facing towards the street. I ran my eyes over the countless shops and noted there wasn’t a bakery.

“This town could use a bakery.” I smiled, watching a small group of people wandering from store to store.

“You think so?” Alec chuckled.

“Like the one you worked at?” Kade asked, a dark eyebrow raised in my direction.

“Exactly like that one.” I nodded, thinking for a minute before adding, “With less pink. I still don’t understand how Beth could stand that much pink.”

“Say the word, and we’ll have a bakery placed in town.” Kade nodded, turning his eyes to the strip of stores that lined the main street through town.

My heart fluttered in my chest at the thought of running my own bakery, and at how quick Alec and Kade had offered to make my new dream come true. I had never had someone care about what I wanted, let alone listen to my personal desires. Every minute I spent with the twins did nothing to prepare me for what my future would become. I still couldn't understand how I came about being mated to these two thoughtful, protective men. The conversation shifted from the potential bakery, to how I might use my budding abilities. Neither had any clue where to begin, as I haven't left them with enough time to properly research white wolves. Thinking back on it, I probably should have scheduled the dinner for later in the week.

"Is there something specific you do to pick up on Alec and I's emotions?" Kade asked.

"No, it kind of just happens." I shrugged, "It's almost instantaneous. If you're feeling pissed, I feel it the moment the emotion forms."

"It might be easier for you to connect to us, seeing as we're your mates." Alec nodded thoughtfully, his unruly hair ruffling in the gentle breeze. "You might have to force it to read someone else."

"Maybe we're the default setting." Kade snickered, and Alec rolled his eyes.

Ignoring the twin's bickering in the background, I pinpointed a specific person walking from shop to shop. A man around Garrett's age, wearing a dark t-shirt and grease-stained pants. From the looks of it, the guy was a mechanic. I tried to reach out with my senses, to try and will the emotions from him. I was met with nothing. The results were the same each time. No matter how hard I tried to force it, the only emotions I was picking up on, belonged to Alec and Kade. Frustration, lust, fondness, and more lust.

“Maybe we should take a break.” Alec suggested when I pinched the bridge of my nose for the tenth time.

A headache was beginning to form, as though I were overexerting myself even though nothing had happened. I let out a long sigh, releasing the pent-up frustration I felt.

“Not yet.” I huffed, “I’m going to try something else.”

Instead of listening to what they had to say, I closed my eyes. Birds chirped, children laughed, and I could even hear the faint whooshing of the wind rushing through the grass. Instead of forcing the emotions from other people, I opened myself up and let them come willingly. At first, nothing happened. Just as I was about to open my eyes, a rush of energy settled over me, followed by hair-raising anger. The anger washed through me like a tidal wave, and I sucked in a raspy breath. It felt like I had inhaled a spoonful of cayenne pepper. The emotion caught me completely off guard as I tore myself from the bench and spun around, facing the source of the blinding emotion.

A head of flaming hair was coming in our direction. Tori’s face was contorted in both surprise and anger as she stormed our way.

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe chapter 57

—

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe Chapter 57

Tori’s anger whipped around her like a tornado. Bits of glass scratched and sliced my skin. Just as I reached out and grasped the thrashing emotion, it slipped from my fingers. An invisible wall slammed down between Tori and I, cutting off my connection to her emotions. I took a staggering breath and tried to calm my own nerves before opening myself up again. Instead of forcing it, I let each sensation brush by me, letting each one go.

The whirlwind that was Tori's anger resumed, swirling around strands of my hair and in between my fingers. I let the anger wash over me, delving deeper. Underneath the anger was the distinct, sharp sting that reminded me of hurt. I scolded myself for a minute. Of course, she was hurt, I had left without a word, leaving the phone she had gotten me on the bed. Tori had been my first friend in such a long time, and I repaid her by constantly refusing to trust her. Hidden even deeper was an emotion I hadn't anticipated; understanding. While her anger was like a blistering fire, the understanding she felt was like the ocean—cool, crisp waves dashing the heat of the flames.

She stopped a few feet in front of me, her chest heaving with emotion. I could see each one play out in her eyes, gritting my teeth against the wave of exhaustion that settled in my bones. I noticed how Alec and Kade took a few steps away from the two of us, neither one dared to interrupt what Tori was about to say. Her face was as red as her flaming hair, her mouth opened and closed but words refused to form.

“You—” She sputtered, her incredulous eyes flashing from me to Alec and Kade. Giving me one last emotion clouded look, she turned her eyes to the twins. “You brought her back.”

“She chose to come back.” Alec murmured, and I couldn't help the grateful look that came across my face. “We wouldn't ever force her.”

“So, you chose to come back?” Tori snorted, placing her hands on her hips in her typical fashion. I had seen this look on Tori's face when she scolded one of Grace's friends for bullying me. “That's ironic considering you chose to leave in the first place. Do you have any idea how that made me feel? None of us knew what had happened to you! I thought we were friends, Aurora. You could have trusted me.”

The anger in Tori’s voice quickly gave way to hurt, which hid that underlying tone of understanding. From those three emotions, I knew that Tori would forgive me. She would undoubtedly make me grovel and earn her forgiveness, but she understood why I had left. I could feel the twin’s unease at the anger in Tori’s tone, but neither stepped in. I appreciated them keeping their distance, knowing I needed to fix this myself. If I was supposed to have this great destiny, I couldn’t let Alec and Kade jump in to fix all of my problems. I made this mess, and it was time I owned up to it. Tori, Alec and Kade, were the most important people in my life at the moment. I had hurt each one of them, and would willingly pay the price to fix that.

“I wasn’t thinking clearly. I wasn’t thinking about who I would hurt, I just needed to leave.” I sighed, feeling nothing but guilt as her emotions battered me. Even with the blinding anger she felt, she was still concerned for me. I knew that if I let myself dig deeper into her emotions, I would feel the tiniest shred of happiness. She was glad I had come home, that I found my way and decided to stay with Alec and Kade. I had no idea what this meant for our friendship, but I wasn’t willing to give up quite yet. “Everything—everything was coming down on me. First Melissa and Frank, then Grace, and then Garrett showed up dropping the biggest bombshell of my life. I didn’t believe him at first, when he told me what I was. I had no idea that you could actually help me, Tori.”

“I know you didn’t, Aurora.” Tori sighed, letting out a sharp breath. “I understand why you left—goddess, I do. Just because I understand, doesn’t mean it didn’t hurt. Anything could have happened to you out there! You could have been caught by someone other than Alec and Kade. You might think you don’t have people who care about you, but you do.”

“I was nearly caught.” I admitted, ignoring the wary glances I received from Alec and Kade. I wanted to trust Tori, to rebuild the bridge I had nearly destroyed. Trust wasn’t something that came naturally to me, but it was something I was willing to work on. I didn’t have any immediate family I could trust, but I knew the family I chose would be much stronger than that of shared blood. I trusted Alec and Kade without even noticing the shift in my emotions, and I wanted to do the same for Tori. “If I hadn’t shifted for the first time—well, I wouldn’t be here now. Alec and Kade found me in time, but I learned my lesson. I let people scare me off instead of trusting the three of you. It’s a mistake I won’t make again.”

The happiness radiating from the twins was enough to wipe the sting away that Tori’s anger had left behind. I could taste Kade’s surprise, as though he was still finding it hard to believe that I had come back. Alec felt the same, random rushes of awe coursed through him when he looked my way. I could feel Tori’s anger diminishing, leaving behind a dull throb that spanned my forehead. Even though her anger was beginning to fade, I could still feel her caution. She wanted to trust me, but I knew it wouldn’t come easy. I wasn’t sure how the twins managed to trust me, but I had a feeling the mate-bond was coming into play. At the mention of my almost capture, Tori’s face hardened. A fierce surge of curiosity and worry bubbled through her, mixing with the understanding and sliver of happiness she felt.

“You were almost captured?” She sputtered, whipping around to face Alec and Kade. “Why wasn’t I told about this? Do you have any idea who did it or what they wanted?”

“We have one of them in a cell.” Kade raised his hands in surrender, “We were planning on questioning him tomorrow, but if you want to take the reins—“

“Not helping.” I murmured to Kade, flushing at the sly grin that formed on his face.

“I’m just saying. With that anger, you might get some answers out of the guy.” Kade chuckled, making Tori scoff and roll her eyes. Even though Kade managed to take some of the fire out of Tori’s eyes, she refused to back down. How Tori managed to stand her ground to not one, but two Alpha’s, was beyond me. Yet, she refused to even flinch as she stared into the eyes of Alec and Kade.

“Perhaps you should tell her, doll.” Alec shrugged, giving me a look that made my legs weak. His look was one of absolute trust, one that told me he and Kade would follow me to the ends of the Earth if I asked.

“Whatever you choose to do, we’ll stand by it.”

This chapter is provided by .com. Visit .com for daily update.

Alec’s words left me enough room to pick and choose what I wanted to tell Tori. I could easily tell her a couple masked men had tried to kidnap me, but I had learned my lesson by not trusting her. I wanted to mend that bridge, to regain the friend I had nearly lost. Keeping more secrets from her would only prove I didn’t trust her. If I was going to do this, I needed to be all in.

“It’s a long story. One I’d rather not tell in public, but if you’re interested—I wouldn’t mind explaining everything.” I told her, hoping she could feel the sincerity of my words, and the weight of what I was willing to tell her. Tori seemed to grasp my understanding as a determined look crossed her face, the thick guard she kept around herself lowering.

“Alright.” Tori exhaled, and I could visibly see her shoulders relaxing.

“Come to my house tomorrow, around noon. Dad and Mom are visiting my Aunt, so they won't be around to hover. If I don't see you tomorrow, I'll hunt you down, Aurora. Not even Alec and Kade will stop me. Also, this is still yours."

Tori placed something cold in my hands, and I looked down at the cellphone she had given me a couple months ago. The battery was full, and I wondered why she had kept it for me. I could see the reluctance in her eyes as she walked away, resuming what she had planned for the day. As Kade wrapped his arms around my waist, and Alec placed a lingering kiss to my forehead, I realized something. Alec, Kade, and Tori were the first people to care about me in such a long time, and I knew that if I allowed it, the three of them would become the family I never had.

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe chapter 58

—

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe Chapter 58

I found myself standing in front of Tori's house the next day, my stomach a bundle of nerves. Even though it seemed like she had forgiven me, I knew I caused a rift to form between us. I knew my reasons for leaving were justifiable, but I couldn't erase the pain I caused in my absence. Just as I had the right to leave, she had the right to be upset.

Crawling into bed with Alec and Kade last night, they both promised to support me regardless of what I told Tori. After asking my permission, Alec and Kade entrusted the information to their Beta's, asking if they would dig up any information about white wolves. That's where Alec and Kade were today, helping their Beta's learn more about me and what I might be capable of. We all knew it was risky to tell Tori the full truth, but I wanted to trust her. I wanted to go that extra mile for her.

As I waited for Tori to come to the door, each passing second made the knot in my stomach grow. I gritted my teeth together and remained in place, resisting the cowardly urge to flee. I wouldn't run, not anymore. I reminded myself that this world wasn't new, it had been here the entire time, hidden right under my nose. Despite my cowardly feelings, I knew I belonged here. I could feel how my heart sang in this pack, how comfortable I felt in this town and around these people. Someday, I reminded myself, these people would become my own.

Tori opened the front door with a wry smile, surprise shining in her eyes. Instead of searching for her emotions, I let them wash over me. Surprise, suspicion, and a sweet note of happiness. It was becoming easier for me, feeling the emotions of others, now that I learned not to force my ability.

"Come on in." Tori murmured, holding the door open for me. "Want something to drink? Mom made some sweet tea."

"Sure." I nodded, following her into the kitchen.

I stood in comfortable silence as Tori padded over to the fridge, pulling out a large pitcher of tea. Her fire-kissed hair was tied up in a bun on her head, a few orange strands fanned out over her forehead. The two of us walked up to her bedroom, and I plopped down on the edge of her bed where I had once sat before.

"Alright, spill." Tori pursed her lips. "What happened when you left? You said you were almost taken. Who? Why?"

I took a long gulp of the sweet tea she had given me, letting it wash down my throat as I thought of the words to say. Now that I was here, the words lodged themselves in my throat. Tori's wariness was like a knife slashing at my insides. Burning guilt filled my veins, but I knew I deserved the reaction.

“I’ll just start when I left. I made it to this small town, and actually got a job at a local bakery. I actually loved working there. One night, I was walking back to the house I rented, and three men attacked me. They smelled..different. Alec and Kade said they were werewolves—like us. I think Thalia—my wolf, knew Alec and Kade were nearby. So, we shifted. Hurt like hell too, not that I stuck around long enough for anyone to explain that part.” I grimaced, readying myself for Tori’s inevitable reaction. “I managed to get away from the men, and I ran, but not before they saw I was a white wolf. I ended up at this woman’s house. She—she helped me realize a few things, that I was wrong for leaving. She was also a white wolf, the last one until I came along. Alec and Kade showed up a little later. They followed my scent until they found me. They told the truth y’know, about not forcing me to come back. They asked me what I wanted, and I decided to stay with them.”

I shifted uncomfortably as Tori collapsed into silence. I traced my fingers along the edges of the glass, feeling the condensation dampen my fingertips. Unable to stand the silence for much longer, I let Tori’s emotions wash over me. The wariness had vanished, as had the initial anger at my leaving. Unfiltered surprise washed over me, tart and crisp like a lemon.

“You—you’re a white wolf?” Tori nodded, though I felt she was saying the words to herself. “Um, are you sure?”

“I’m pretty sure.” I giggled, a hand over my mouth as I read the acceptance in her eyes.

“And you’re trusting me with this. I mean—I’m assuming Alec and Kade told you what a white wolf is, and you know what could happen if this got out to anyone else.” Tori murmured, fixing me with an intense stare.

“They told me, but I trust you.” I nodded, meeting her eyes unflinchingly. “I think they trust you too. They told me to do what I thought was right, so I did.”

“You know I wouldn’t tell anyone, right?” Tori replied, and I couldn’t help the smile that had formed on my face.

This chapter is provided by .com. Visit .com for daily update.

The more time I spent in this pack, the more I realized the mistake I had made. While I couldn’t change the past, I think running away gave me perspective on some things. I now trusted Alec and Kade, despite the rocky start we all had. I also trusted Tori, and knew we would be friends for a long time.

“I know you wouldn’t.” I smiled softly, “I wouldn’t have told you if I thought otherwise.”

“So, you’re really back.” Tori exhaled; an ear-splitting grin had formed on her face. “I was going to ask, but I think it’s kind of obvious. You know Alec and Kade are your mates.”

“Yeah, I already figured that part out.” I chuckled, hesitating as a small pang of emotion danced through me. I missed them, I realized. Even though they were with their Beta’s at the moment, and would pick me up later, I missed the two of them. It seemed no matter how much time I spent with them; it was never enough. Each minute in their presence only increased what I felt for them, emotions I had never felt for anyone.

“Did you let them mark you?” Tori spoke lowly, her wide eyes darting around my face and neck. “I mean—I’m not sure how it would work, having two mates and all. You might have two marks, who knows!”

“Wait, what?” I frowned, “Mark me?”

“They never mentioned it, did they?” Tori scoffed. A few fiery strands of hair slipped from her bun as she shook her head. “They probably didn’t want to force you into anything, especially after all that’s happened.”

“Care to explain?” I quipped; an eyebrow raised.

“I’m only explaining this to you cause the look on your face worries me.” Tori laughed, “I’d hate for you to chew out Alec and Kade so quickly after accepting them. On second thought, that might be fun to watch.”

“Tori!” I groaned, “Tell me what it is!”

“Your wolf hasn’t mentioned it?” She asked.

“Thalia can be quite unhelpful when she wants to be.” I snickered.

‘You came back to the pack, and accepted them as our mates.’ Thalia huffed, rolling her eyes at me. ‘The last thing I wanted to do was chase you off again. Goddess knows you don’t listen.’

“Well, basically Alec and Kade would bite you. Right here.” Tori pointed to the spot where my shoulder and neck meet. A strange sensation danced through me, sending little tingles down to the tips of my toes. “I don’t know how it would work with two mates, but that’s the gist of it. Mom said it hurts a lot, but it’s worth it in the end. The wound heals and leaves a really pretty mark, totally unique to the couple. It basically tells unmated wolves to back the hell off.”

“Would I have to mark them?” I asked, sounding unsure. “How would I do that? I’m not sure how I shifted in the first place, and I can’t imagine biting Alec and Kade in my wolf form, my mouth would fit over their entire neck.”

“You don’t have to be in wolf form to do it.” Tori shook her head.

I watched in silence as Tori grinned at me. My jaw dropped when her teeth elongated, her canines growing into that of a wolf. It looked funny, those large teeth in her small mouth. Her lengthened canines shrunk back into place, her teeth returning to normal.

“How do I do that?” I asked, somewhat excitedly.

While I knew nothing about werewolf customs, I could tell the whole marking thing was a big deal. While Thalia certainly encouraged me to mark Alec and Kade, I found myself hesitating. It was another step in our strange relationship. I couldn’t deny how appealing it sounded, to have everyone know that Alec and Kade were mine, and vice versa. Still, I wanted to be sure before I jumped into anything. I wasn’t even sure if we were in an official relationship, though I had a feeling being mates surpassed a normal boyfriend girlfriend agreement.

“Then comes the fun part.” Tori snickered, “Usually after marking one another, you complete the mating process. That part should be interesting for you, having two mates and all.”

“Completing the mating process?” I frowned; suspicious as thick amusement washed through Tori. “I have a strange feeling it’s not going to be pleasant.”

“Not going to be pleasant, ha!” Tori snorted, “Oh, it’ll be pleasant alright.”

“I’m not understanding.” I sighed.

“Have you never? Oh, I understand now.” Tori nodded to herself, smirking as an irritated look fell on my face. “Completing the mating process solidifies the bond between mates. First you mark each other, then you sleep together.”

“Sleep together.” I repeated, swallowing roughly as I realized what she meant.

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe chapter 59

—

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe Chapter 59

I wasn't sure why I was surprised. I had done things with Alec and Kade before, things that set my skin aflame and sent my blood racing through my veins. Tori was right, it was more than pleasant being with Alec and Kade. I knew the next step would come eventually, but I never let myself think on it too much. I couldn't help but wonder how that would work—how I might be with the two of them.

“I can practically see the gears turning in your head.” Tori cackled, “It's not rocket science, Aurora. There's never been a she-wolf with two mates before, but I'd say take them at the same time!”

“At the same time?” I sputtered, choking on the oxygen that rippled and swirled in my lungs.

I trusted Alec and Kade, and knew they'd never push me into anything, but I couldn't imagine having them both at the same time. I knew how it worked, but also knew stuff like that came with quite a bit of discomfort.

“You have more than one hole.” Tori smirked, and I felt my skin heat unbearably.

“Alright, that’s enough of that.” I shook my head, gulping down the rest of my tea. “Let’s not talk about—er, my holes.”

“Oh, Aurora.” Tori laughed, “You have much to learn.”

“So, you’ve had sex before?” I asked warily, somewhat flustered and embarrassed.

“I have. I dated a human guy for a few years, but he moved away.” Tori shrugged as though it were nothing new. “Werewolves can mate with humans sometimes. Not often, but it happens. He wasn’t my mate, but that didn’t stop me from sleeping with him. Saving yourself for your mates is an outdated notion anyway. Do you see the male werewolves saving themselves? No, you don’t! So why should I?”

I let Tori finish her mini-rant, but found myself agreeing with her. It was another unspoken custom I was completely unfamiliar with, but I found myself enjoying Tori’s strong-willed personality. I couldn’t help but wonder who her mate was, and hoped he had a boat load of patience.

I spent the next few hours with Tori, only leaving when I had no other choice. Our dinner with Garrett was in a few hours, and I needed time to shower and change before making my appearance. I knew it would be a stressful afternoon, especially if Garrett’s wife was close by. I hadn’t a clue what Julian’s purpose for being there was, but I figured I’d ask Alec and Kade soon enough.

As Tori and I sat on her front porch waiting for Alec and Kade, I found myself thinking over what we had talked about. I wasn’t sure I was ready to sleep with Alec and Kade, but I continued thinking about the mark that would one day sit on my skin. Would it be two marks? Would they be the same? I couldn't help but wonder how much it would hurt. Tori's Mom said it hurt a lot, so I could only imagine what receiving two marks would feel like. I wasn't sure I was looking forward to the pain, but if it meant keeping Alec and Kade by my side, I would endure it for them. I had just worked up the courage to ask them about it when their car pulled into the driveway. My courage fizzled like a damp match, sputtering out as I locked eyes with Kade.

Their emotions slammed into me like a battering ram, making me dizzy as I tore myself from the swing on Tori's porch. I could tell they both had missed me; I could feel it in every blistering emotion that exuded from their large forms. It took all the willpower I could muster not to rush into their arms. Instead of barreling down the steps, I settled for a brisk jog.

As my arms wrapped around Kades waist, I could feel his surprise and awe at my touch. Once I got my fill of Kades thick and delectable scent, I moved on to Alec. Their muscular arms wrapped around my torso, holding me against them as they each planted a kiss to the top of my head.

"Missed us, sweetheart?" Kade smirked, brushing a hand through his already messy hair.

"I did." I admitted with a smile. "Don't bother lying. I can tell you both missed me just as much."

This chapter is provided by .com. Visit .com for daily update.

"It seems we can't hide anything from you." Alec chuckled, a sly grin on his handsome face.

Alec hopped back into the car, driving the extremely short distance to their house and pulled into the drive way. Tori lived only a house away from Alec and Kade, making our friendship even more convenient. I walked along side Kade, unable to resist slipping my hand in his own. His large hand engulfed mine, but somehow, they both fit perfectly.

“We have just enough time to shower and change.” Kade looked down on me, his eyes softening as they met my own.

“Though, we could save more time if we showered together.” Alec smirked, hopping out of the car.

Kade’s face mirrored Alec’s, their devious expressions caused a blush to form on my cheeks. My mind instantly went back to my conversation with Tori, only making my blush deepen.

“Looks like our mate is having some interesting thoughts.” Kade murmured, brushing a knuckle across my heated skin.

“Somehow, I don’t think that would save time.” I cleared my throat. I added extra sweetness to my voice as I cooed at the two of them, “You two could shower together, that would save us plenty of time. Plus, I wouldn’t mind the show.”

Alec and Kade shared a blank look before turning back to me. Judging from their gentle emotions, they weren’t completely against my suggestion. If anything, the thought of me watching them shower, it was somewhat appealing. My inexperience with all things sexual made me somewhat timid, but the twins brought out a new side of me. Despite the nervousness I felt around them, I also felt comfortable enough to be myself.

“She’s so cruel, brother.” Alec sighed, shaking his head. He met his brothers’ eyes, and a sly grin formed on his full lips. “I suppose we could give her a free show, just this once.”

“Next time, it’ll be your turn.” Kade leaned down, murmuring in my ear with his rough voice. I couldn’t hold back the shiver that worked its way down my spine, nor the blush that reappeared at the sound of Kades sultry laugh.

That was how I found myself just a few short minutes later. I sat on one of those plush stools in their large bathroom, and I was sure my blush had permanently embedded itself onto my face. I hadn’t thought the two of them were serious about giving me a show, but it seemed they were both determined to prove me wrong.

The shower in the bathroom was huge, set with multiple shower heads that protruded from the walls. The ceiling itself was one big showerhead, raining water down onto the tiled floor. I couldn’t help but notice the shower had no doors. There were two marble steps that led into the shower, to where the water could easily drain without flooding the bathroom. The shower was easily large enough for the three of us, but I couldn’t work up the courage to join them.

“Enjoy the show, doll.” Alec murmured, his hand grazing underneath my chin. An amused smile twitched onto his lips, making him look even more deviously handsome.

Even though my face held its blush, I couldn’t force myself to turn away. Alec stripped the long sleeve shirt from his torso, his movements slow and confident. I watched in silence, practically drooling, as his muscles rippled with the movement. Kade followed after, his build a little larger than his brothers, but equally drool worthy.

I couldn't begin to fathom how I found myself here, watching my two mates strip bare in front of my very eyes. Normally, a girl was lucky to have one male in her romantic life that looked like this, yet I had two.

I swallowed thickly as Kade's pants fell to the ground, tossed in the hamper that sat across the bathroom. Warm steam filled the bathroom from the shower, warming my body even more. Even if I wanted to, I couldn't tear my eyes away as the two of them stood bare in front of me.

While Alec and Kade were identical twins, there were some parts of them that were different from one another. Kade's build was a little larger than his brothers, his shoulders just a little broader. Alec's abs were more defined than his brothers, his muscles ending in harsh lines and angles. A few scars were etched onto their torso and backs, but they only added to the allure that clung to the two of them.

They both stood in silence, eyes dark and blown wide with lust as my gaze traveled even lower. I sucked in a harsh breath as I caught sight of the length between their legs. They were both hard, the steel between their legs hung proudly. Kade was thicker than his brother, but Alec's was just an inch or two longer. I shifted on the stool; my thighs pressed tightly together as I forced my eyes to travel even lower. Large, muscular thighs led down to chiseled calf muscles. The two of them were works of art, identical yet different in every way. Porcelain skin chiseled from stone, mine to taste, to devour and savor.

"Are you sure you don't want to join us, sweetheart?" Kade murmured, his eyes practically burning into my skin, as though he could see past the layer of clothes that clung to my body.

"We would miss dinner." I managed to choke out, my gaze slowly trailing up their bodies. "We would definitely miss dinner."

Their lust and desire washed over me like a boiling wave. Heat flooded my veins, sizzling as it hit my skin. They both wanted me, wanted me more than I could express in words. Even with the overwhelming need they were feeling, they both remained rooted in place. They'd go at my pace; Alec had once told me.

My willpower would crumble, would break and burn until there was nothing left. I would give them everything, anything they wanted if they continued to look at me like that, like there was nothing in this world more potent than me. My breaths came out in short pants, and with all the willpower in my body, I forced my eyes to return to their faces.

"We would miss dinner, but you wouldn't regret it." Alec smirked, but the expression didn't reach his consuming gaze.

"No, I don't think I would regret it." I managed to reply, "I'll get in once you two are finished."

Alec and Kade heeded my words, and both stepped into the shower after flashing me another heated look. While they were facing away from me, I watched as the water beaded and ran down the muscles spanning their backs. The water twisted and turned, caught by the grooves of their muscles. I knew they could feel my eyes on them, running down their shoulders and lingering on their firm bottoms. They even had nice asses, I thought to myself. I expected some flaw, some imperfection. No person, human or werewolf, could be this—this perfect. Even their physical flaws added to the allure, to the intense attractiveness that radiated from every pore, every rippling muscle and spattering of hair.

I let out a long sigh as the two of them finished and left the bathroom, giving me privacy as I showered. The two of them remained hard nearly the entire shower. At least thirty times I had contemplated skipping the dinner altogether, marking and mating just as Tori and I talked about. I reminded myself over and over again, that we needed to be at this dinner. I needed the information, needed to see if Garrett was telling the truth.

The water rained down on me, soothing my tense muscles. It wasn't a show they had given me; it was utter torture. I didn't think it would be this hard not to touch them, not to give into my instincts and urges. As the water poured down on me, my soaked hair clinging to my shoulders and back, I slipped a hand between my legs and let out a quiet sigh.

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe chapter 60

—

Mated to the Alpha twins novel by Jane Doe Chapter 60

No matter how I muffled the sighs that left my lips, release refused to come. It was like my body knew what it wanted, just as my mind and heart did. It refused to function for anyone else, refused to react unless it was under the gentle touches of the twins. Understanding my efforts were hopeless, I finished my shower and dried off.

I had brought a change of clothes into the bathroom, and slipped on a thigh-length dress. The sleeves were long but thin, enough to combat the gentle chill that started up this afternoon. I blow-dried my hair while the twins waited outside, undoubtedly getting ready themselves.

As I stepped out into the bedroom, I was bombarded by the thick scent of Alec and Kade. As I turned to grab a pair of shoes, Alec stood in my way. We were only inches apart, but I could feel the heat radiating from his skin. His musky scent swirled with the slight tang of tea-tree from his body wash. The scent was entirely new, but equally to die for. My breathing hitched as Alec trailed a finger down my reddened face, lingering around my collar bones.

“Were you able to finish?” Alec murmured, toying with the hem of my dress. His warm fingers danced along my bare thigh, coaxing a thick shiver that ran down my spine.

“No.” I swallowed, my voice coming out a few octaves higher.

Alec continued toying with the hem of my dress, letting his fingertips dance closer and closer to the softness between my legs. Just as the pad of his finger grazed over my underwear, he pulled away. His eyes were dark, and the fabric of his pants was tight around the middle. He gripped my face with one of his large hands, tilting my head up so that I looked him in the eye.

“Poor little mate. Even now, your body craves us.” Alec murmured; his breath fanned across my ear. “Kade and I will help you later.”

His lips trailed along my jaw, igniting that aching fire low in my gut. I pressed my thighs tightly together, ignoring the scent of my arousal as it flooded the room.

“Where is Kade?” I asked, my eyes darting around the room as I fumbled for a reason to change the subject.

Alec and Kade separate were a constant temptation, a constant chip in my willpower. Together—together they were irresistible. Having that much male attention focused solely on yourself—a girl could get used to that. The way they seem to devour my reactions, inhaling the blissful noises that leave my lips under their touch. Being with them—fully, it would be all consuming.

“Your little whimpers got him too worked up.” Alec chuckled lowly in my ear, “He needed a few minutes to himself. You’re welcome to lend him a hand, though I might get jealous.”

It took me a handful of minutes to calm myself down, and another ten minutes to still the intimate thoughts fumbling through my head. When Kade finally returned, he flashed me a wide smirk as my face heated and my eyes darted downward. When we finally managed to leave the house, Alec and Kade gave me a rundown of who Julian was.

He had been the leader of a small band of rogues, but quickly grew in power as his pack number increased. Eventually, he became a full-blown Alpha. It was rare to create your own pack, as werewolves would always fight for power but Julian had managed to do just that. As Julians numbers continued to grow, he sought out a home for him and his pack. He claimed a small sliver of territory above Garrett's pack. As Julian's pack grew, he began to need more territory to fit his people. Alec and Kade's territory were vast, and encompassed both Julian and Garretts territory. Alpha Julian had asked multiple times that Alec and Kade relinquish some of their territory to Julian and his growing pack, that they seek out more territory to the North to replace what they had lost. Alec and Kade refused, as thousands of people would then need to leave their homes and move hundreds of miles away. While I couldn't blame Alec and Kade for doing what was best for their people, I knew there had to be some solution to the problem.

The sun was beginning to set as we pulled into Garretts drive way. The sky was bright with color. Navy blue, indigo, orange and pink flashed across the sky. The moon was slightly visible, a thin sliver in the distance. Yellow light shined from inside Garretts house, and I braced myself for the inevitable meeting with his wife.

Kady answered the door as we knocked, giving me a nervous smile as we stepped inside. I was wary when she locked eyes with Alec and Kade. She looked at them the way most people did. Her eyes grew wide at their build, and shock undoubtedly flashed over her face.

“I’m apologizing ahead of time for anything my Mom says.” Kady grimaced, “Not that it makes a difference.”

This chapter is provided by .com. Visit .com for daily update.

I could feel her sincerity fill the room, washing over me like a cold wave. Kady wasn’t a bad person, I knew that now. She had said some rude words out of jealousy and spite, but that didn’t define her as a person.

“I appreciate it.” I told her honestly.

“Are you going to tell Dad what I told you?” Kady frowned, lowering her voice. She gave Alec and Kade a nervous glance, but otherwise turned her attention towards me. “I mean—I can’t blame you if you did, but Dad won’t be happy.”

“I won’t tell him you said anything.” I assured her.

I could feel her gratefulness, sweet like candy but tinged with something bitter. Guilt flooded her veins, bitter and somewhat chilling. She was hiding something from me. It was like a whisper in my head, warning me she wasn’t being completely truthful. Why would she feel guilty if she had told me everything she knew? I pushed the feeling aside and followed Kady into the large dining room.

The smaller table had been replaced with a larger one. Seated at the head was Garrett, off to his left was his wife and on his right was Julian. Garrett wore a crisp suit as he often did, this one a dark shade of slate grey. Veronica looked impeccable as always. If it weren’t for the deeply etched sneer on her face, she would’ve been runway beautiful. Her golden hair was the same shade as Kady’s, and fell to her back in glossy waves. Her cherry lipstick was bright yet tasteful, and matched the sleek dress she wore. She didn’t look a day over twenty-five, but the sneer added a few years onto that. While Veronica flashed me a weighted look, she said nothing.

Veronica didn't need to use her words to get her point across.

Overwhelming distain and something close to hatred spewed from her pores, wafting over me like a poisonous fog. I nearly flinched at the impact. I had never felt negative emotions before through my newly acquired gift. I had felt Tori's anger, but it was a far cry from the hate that Veronica was throwing my way.

"It's good to see you." Garrett gave me one of those charming business smiles and sat down.

While his smile was one he flashed to many, making him look charismatic and laid back, I could tell he was being sincere. He was truly happy that we had come for dinner.

Now that I could feel the emotions of others, I wasn't sure how I felt about Garrett. He wasn't perfect, and he was far from ever becoming a parental figure in my life, but his emotions spoke louder than his actions and words. For instance, I could feel his nervousness. For whatever reason, he was worried about tonight. The brief tang of guilt radiated through him, similar to Kady's though I couldn't determine the source.

"Thanks for having us." I managed to say through gritted teeth.

I sat at the far end of the table, directly across from Garrett. Alec and Kade sat on opposite sides of me. Their positive emotions fought against Veronica's. Their affection, happiness, and awe battled the hate that washed over me in waves.

"This isn't awkward or anything." Julian coughed, covering his laugh with a long swig of alcohol.

Kady hid her smile behind her glass of wine, while Veronica threw one of her signature glares at Julian. It seemed I wasn't the only one Veronica hated. The only people she seemed to truly care about was her daughter and mate.

Lucy and a handful of men brought out our dinner. Pristine china covered by a silver dome. It was unbearably fancy, and something I wasn't used to. Lucy hadn't changed in the time I had been gone. The lines etched into her face made her look friendly and approachable. As she spotted me at the table, a kind smile formed on her face. She was glad to see me, I could tell from the subtle emotions radiating from her. Her wheat-colored hair was pulled into a bun as she padded over to me.

"Steak or salad?" She asked, giving my shoulder a gentle squeeze.

"Steak." I replied, rolling my eyes at Alec and Kade's identical grins.

They both looked deviously handsome tonight. Both wore black button-down shirts and black slacks. The only difference between them was their hair. Alec's hair was all one length, grazing his ears messily. Kade's hair was shorter around the base, but longer on top. Each time they turned their eyes away from me, which wasn't often, I couldn't help but gawk at the muscles protruding from their clothes.

A quiet snort sounded from across the table as I eyed the steak on my plate hungrily. I caught Veronica's cold eyes, and grimaced as she shook her head disdainfully. Her mouth opened and for a second, I thought she was actually going to say something. She caught Alec's eye and seemed to think better of what she wanted to say. Her mouth clicked shut, and her disdainful gaze turned to Julian.

“So, what made you come back?” Julian blurted out, giving Garrett a shrug when he scolded him. “What? I hardly know her. Consider me curious.”

“I made a mistake leaving. When Garrett told me what I was, I kind of freaked out.” I frowned. Some of the tension left my body as I felt Alec’s finger tips graze my kneecap from under the table. “He picked the worst way to break the news though.”

“I take full responsibility for that.” Garrett grunted, and I swore I could make out the lightest shade of pink tinging his cheeks. I could feel his embarrassment and sheepishness at his mistake. “In all honesty, I assumed Melissa would have told you something.”

“I lived with my Grandma for a while. I never really saw Melissa until she died.” I shrugged.

“Your Grandma was a fine woman.” Garrett nodded, and I could tell he was speaking the truth. “Miserable to be around once you pissed her off though.”

“That she was.” I nodded in full agreement.

“You lived with your Grandma for a while then?” Julian chimed in, his voice casual and almost bored.

While Julians voice sounded bored, his emotions were anything but. He was interested, and his curiosity was almost overwhelming. I wasn’t sure why he was so interested in my life, but I figured it couldn’t hurt. My Grandma had died a long time ago, there was nothing to be used against me by telling them this.

“Since I was born.” I shrugged, “When she died, I moved in with Melissa.”

“How did that go for you? Living with your Mother.” Julian asked, and I couldn’t ignore the way Garrett grimaced.

More guilt swirled around him. I was beginning to question my gift. Since I met Garrett, I thought the only thing he cared about was my future role in the pack. Judging from his strange emotions, he felt some semblance of responsibility for me. He felt guilty for leaving, guilty because I lived ignorant and miserable with Melissa. I shoved the conflicting feelings deep down and turned to face Julian.

“Melissa isn’t my Mother, never was. I stayed out of their way and lived my life.” I replied, “I took care of myself.”

Veronica scoffed for the third time, but it seemed she couldn’t keep her mouth shut.

“A child who shows no respect for her parents has no right ruling an entire pack.” Veronica snapped; her voice cold. “How can you show respect to those you rule, to those willing to lay down their lives for you if you can’t even respect your own family?”

“Veronica.” Garrett’s voice was full of hostility, though I could tell he was restraining himself.

Like it or not, Veronica was his mate. No matter how bitchy and rude she was, he’d always have a soft spot for her. While I was having a hard time accepting that fact, I was glad to have Alec and Kade by my side. Alec and Kade had no qualms about defending me. In fact, Alec let out a low growl in her direction. Both Alec and Kade were glaring daggers at Veronica.

“Enough. It’s fine.” I told Alec and Kade, giving them a grateful smile. I turned my attention to Veronica, and absolutely refused to balk under her intense glare. “My family is Alec and Kade. I respect them just as they respect me. Melissa and Frank were never my family. Respect isn’t blindly given, Veronica. It’s fought for and earned. Which is why you will never, ever have my respect.”

Julian let out a low whistle, snickering as Veronica’s face turned an unflattering shade of red. Kady seemed shocked, her eyes flickering between me and her mother. Even Kade chuckled lowly, taking a long drink before sharing a smirk with his brother.

“She’s definitely part of the family.” Julian chuckled.

If it weren’t for my strange ability to feel emotions, I would have never noticed the meaning in what Julian had said. As Julian finished speaking, a barrage of emotions flooded the room. Garrett was feeling panic and shock, fear and anger. Julian was feeling amusement and irritation. Even Veronica felt panicked, her eyes burning into Julian unflinchingly. Kady—that familiar sting of bitter guilt came back. Alec and Kade seemed not to notice the meaning, but I did.

“Part of the family.” I repeated slowly, savoring the emotions that flooded through each of them.

My eyes flickered from Garrett to Julian, noting the differences and similarities. Garrett and Julian seemed to be having a silent argument, one that Garrett was currently losing. As their quiet battle finished, Julian fixed me with a heavy stare.

“Yes, Aurora. Part of the family.” Julian nodded, a smile twitching at the corners of his lips. “It’s nice to finally meet my niece.”

