

The Amazing son in law/ Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade Chapter 7211

With Tawana's influence, the moment she shows her face in the video, the impact will be profound. The video will dominate entertainment headlines worldwide and may even appear on news headlines.

However, this will inevitably have a certain effect on her public image. Still, Tawana insists on appearing in the video herself, which signifies her decision to get involved directly.

Trevor understands that once the full video is released, it will inevitably cause harm to Tawana. But seeing her firm resolve, he realizes that Tawana's inner beliefs have shifted.

In the past, she supported all LGBT-related matters without hesitation, regardless of whether they were right, wrong, or suitable. Now, she understands that such issues may not be appropriate for public figures to address openly.

Tawana also hopes the criticisms Charlie Wade made about her will reach the world. She believes this can alert others globally who fail to discern right from wrong.

Another reason driving Tawana's decision is her desire to repay Charlie Wade's life-saving grace. She also hopes to show him that her attitude has changed.

Through Charlie Wade's words, Tawana realized that he is someone with a genuine sense of social responsibility. Unlike others, he doesn't preach about it; he keeps it in his heart.

It's evident that Charlie Wade deeply cares about young people who have gone astray. He doesn't want them to be manipulated by those with ulterior motives, become victims, or pay irreversible prices in their lives.

By asking Trevor to upload the video, Tawana sees it as a way of helping Charlie Wade convey his message to the world. She believes he would be pleased to see this effort.

At this moment, Trevor looks at Tawana in a new light.

He feels a growing respect for her decision.

Trevor says to Tawana, "Since you've made up your mind, I'll process the video and upload it soon."

Tawana nods, smiles bitterly, and sighs. "Trevor, I already have a rough idea of who wants me gone.

"Before today, those people shared the same stance as I did—they publicly supported minority groups without hesitation. But their outward righteousness doesn't align with their true nature.

“I want this video to open the eyes of others who, like me, have been deceived.

“From now on, I will avoid making any public statements that aren’t related to music, my career, or my personal life.”

Trevor immediately agrees and says, “I feel the same way. Not only will I avoid irrelevant public statements, but I’ll also distance myself from those who always push their positions.

“As for those who remain stubborn, it’s time they wake up.”

Since Tawana’s performance that evening was scheduled to start on time, the party concluded informally by five o’clock in the afternoon.

Tawana still had much to prepare for the performance, including finalizing her costumes, makeup, band arrangements, and choreography with her dancers.

Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade Chapter 7212

So, Tawana and Trevor said goodbye to everyone at five o’clock, left the party, and went directly backstage to prepare for the performance.

As for the remaining guests, since they planned to watch the performance at seven o’clock, Mitsui Yoshitaka thoughtfully arranged a buffet. The guests gathered in small groups of three or five to eat and chat.

Charlie Wade, Claire, and Loreen formed a group of three and naturally sat at a table with Fei Kexin and Kelly West.

Mitsui Yoshitaka came over to greet them politely before moving on to greet other guests.

Halfway through the buffet, Fei Kexin’s phone buzzed with a notification from an American video platform. The title read: A video of Tawana Sweet debating with a mysterious person on LGBT in Tokyo has been leaked.

She exclaimed in surprise, “Mr. Wade, it seems the video of your debate with Tawana has been uploaded online!”

“Really?” Charlie Wade smiled and said, “Click it and see if they censored it for us.”

Fei Kexin opened the notification and saw that everyone in the video, except for Tawana, had been mosaiced, including Charlie Wade.

She placed her phone on the table so everyone could see and said, “The video is mosaiced. Unless someone recognizes your voice, Mr. Wade, they won’t know it’s you.”

Charlie Wade nodded and watched the video as it played. It was clear that the footage had been taken from Trevor’s angle, and, as promised, Trevor hadn’t deleted any part of the content.

When the video ended, Fei Kexin quickly opened the comment section. At first, there wasn’t much meaningful discussion; most of the comments were simple emojis or irrelevant remarks, similar to netizens rushing to “grab the sofa” in other regions.

This was likely because many people commented before watching the video. But within ten to twenty seconds, the comments started growing rapidly, and substantive opinions began to emerge.

In the debate between the two, the comments soon became overwhelmingly one-sided. Most viewers supported the points made by the mysterious man in the video, praising them as reasonable and well-argued. Charlie Wade’s statement that “it is not protection, but production of LGBT” resonated deeply with many people.

On the other hand, Tawana’s performance in the debate came across poorly. Her lack of eloquence, weak logic, and flawed arguments made her seem unreasonable and immature, almost like a child who couldn’t make her point stick.

Moreover, because Charlie Wade emphasized issues regarding minors, audiences who agreed with him started to view Tawana’s previous public efforts as harmful. They believed her campaigns had unintentionally contributed to “poisoning” many young minds.

This led to a wave of criticism directed at Tawana.

Fortunately for her, Tawana had a massive global fanbase. Alongside her loyal followers, there were also casual listeners who enjoyed her music but didn’t necessarily like her as a person.

Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade Chapter 7213

It can be said that there is a group that neither likes nor hates Tawana. These individuals hold a relatively neutral attitude toward her. They recognize that many things Tawana did in the past were inappropriate, but they refrain from attacking her because of them.

Of course, there are also many voices in the comments that continue to strongly support Tawana. These people could be her devoted fans or members of sexual minorities who feel supported by her actions. Even though Charlie Wade clearly stated in the video that he respects LGBT individuals, he expressed concerns about public figures addressing these topics excessively and people exploiting this for other gains.

Despite this, some angry users criticized Charlie Wade in forums, accusing him of lacking respect for LGBT rights or outright opposing them.

However, such dissenting voices were in the minority and were largely drowned out by overwhelming support for Charlie Wade.

Even the renowned British author Rowling, who has often faced backlash, reposted the video on her social media. She commented:

“What this mysterious man said is exactly what I’ve always wanted to express. Many celebrities like Tawana treat LGBT issues as untouchable gods, refusing to allow any criticism or questioning of inappropriate behaviors within the community. They’ve publicly attacked and boycotted me, which amounts to a form of ideological coercion. I’ve had enough of their actions! Now, what intrigues me most is how these public figures, who once criticized me, will respond to this video and my tweet. Have they realized their own mistakes and chosen silence? Let’s wait and see.”

Rowling’s tweet quickly garnered massive support from netizens, with many calling out public figures who had previously condemned her. Specific attention was drawn to the actors who gained fame by portraying characters from her books. These actors had once vigorously boycotted Rowling, even suggesting she be removed from the stories she created.

Now, after watching the video and reading Rowling’s tweet, these critics had fallen silent.

No one dared to criticize Rowling publicly at this moment. Tawana had become the primary target of online backlash, and anyone who attacked Rowling now risked facing a global wave of criticism similar to what Tawana was enduring.

Meanwhile, in the dressing room, Tawana silently scrolled through the online comments. After reading many of them, Trevor, standing nearby, couldn’t help but say:

“Dear, the current public opinion isn’t in your favor. You mustn’t let it affect your mindset.”

He then tried to reassure her:

“Thankfully, most people are showing tolerance toward you. As long as you avoid making public statements in the future, people will eventually see that you’ve changed.”

Tawana set down her phone and replied earnestly:

“The direction of the video isn’t favorable to me, and that proves I was wrong before. I hope the spread of this video helps others understand the core of this issue. I want people like me to realize their mistakes and know that it’s never too late to change.”

When the video went viral worldwide, Tawanna had already moved past the matter and focused on preparing for her performance that evening.

Charlie Wade suspected that Trevor had gained Tawanna’s consent to release the video, or perhaps it was Tawanna’s own idea. This realization slightly altered Charlie’s perception of her.

Releasing the video was undoubtedly risky. It could cost Tawanna some popularity or even alienate a portion of her fanbase. Yet, it also demonstrated her courage.

In the long run, Charlie believed this move could work in Tawanna's favor.

Eventually, she would need to confront and distance herself from those with ulterior motives. While the video made her appear somewhat vulnerable, it wasn't tied to any significant scandal. If she used this moment to clearly separate herself from those individuals, she could navigate the fallout effectively and emerge stronger.

After finishing their buffet meal, the group prepared to enter the dome arena.

Charlie realized that while his face was blurred in the video, his distinctive clothing and physique were unaltered. If he went backstage, someone might recognize and photograph him, potentially exposing his identity online. To avoid this, he asked Fei Kexin to reach out to Mitsui Yoshitaka and arrange a private box.

He, Claire, Loreen, and Fei Kexin made their way to the box via a private passage. Though the box was farther from the stage, it offered excellent privacy and featured large LCD screens for a clear view of the performance.

At seven o'clock, the show began. Despite the controversy surrounding the video, Tawanna's reputation seemed unaffected among her devoted fans. Their thunderous cheers ignited the atmosphere from the very first moment.

Tawanna proved why she was a top-tier performer. Her dynamic stage presence captivated the audience, and her stamina was remarkable—singing and dancing flawlessly through three consecutive songs without missing a beat.

After completing the opening set, Tawanna greeted the Tokyo audience warmly and exchanged a few customary pleasantries.

In previous concerts, Tawanna often expressed her strong support for the LGBT community. She would encourage her fans to stand in solidarity and frequently criticized certain American political figures.

Tonight, many fans and curious onlookers were eagerly watching, both in the arena and on social media, anticipating her response to the video and her recent controversies. Some speculated that she might even announce her intention to leave the United States.

Over the years, several celebrities had made similar declarations, vowing to leave the country if circumstances didn't align with their expectations. Tawanna, being one of the most influential among them, had fans wondering if she would make such a statement during the concert.

Surprisingly, Tawanna kept the focus on her music. The concert spanned three and a half hours, and every few songs...

Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade Chapter 7214

When the video went viral worldwide, Tawanna had already moved past the matter and focused on preparing for her performance that evening.

Charlie Wade suspected that Trevor had gained Tawanna's consent to release the video, or perhaps it was Tawanna's own idea. This realization slightly altered Charlie's perception of her.

Releasing the video was undoubtedly risky. It could cost Tawanna some popularity or even alienate a portion of her fanbase. Yet, it also demonstrated her courage.

In the long run, Charlie believed this move could work in Tawanna's favor.

Eventually, she would need to confront and distance herself from those with ulterior motives. While the video made her appear somewhat vulnerable, it wasn't tied to any significant scandal. If she used this moment to clearly separate herself from those individuals, she could navigate the fallout effectively and emerge stronger.

After finishing their buffet meal, the group prepared to enter the dome arena.

Charlie realized that while his face was blurred in the video, his distinctive clothing and physique were unaltered. If he went backstage, someone might recognize and photograph him, potentially exposing his identity online. To avoid this, he asked Fei Kexin to reach out to Mitsui Yoshitaka and arrange a private box.

He, Claire, Loreen, and Fei Kexin made their way to the box via a private passage. Though the box was farther from the stage, it offered excellent privacy and featured large LCD screens for a clear view of the performance.

At seven o'clock, the show began. Despite the controversy surrounding the video, Tawanna's reputation seemed unaffected among her devoted fans. Their thunderous cheers ignited the atmosphere from the very first moment.

Tawanna proved why she was a top-tier performer. Her dynamic stage presence captivated the audience, and her stamina was remarkable—singing and dancing flawlessly through three consecutive songs without missing a beat.

After completing the opening set, Tawanna greeted the Tokyo audience warmly and exchanged a few customary pleasantries.

In previous concerts, Tawanna often expressed her strong support for the LGBT community. She would encourage her fans to stand in solidarity and frequently criticized certain American political figures.

Tonight, many fans and curious onlookers were eagerly watching, both in the arena and on social media, anticipating her response to the video and her recent controversies. Some speculated that she might even announce her intention to leave the United States.

Over the years, several celebrities had made similar declarations, vowing to leave the country if circumstances didn't align with their expectations. Tawanna, being one of the most influential among them, had fans wondering if she would make such a statement during the concert.

Surprisingly, Tawanna kept the focus on her music. The concert spanned three and a half hours, and every few songs...

During the performance, there were interactive sessions where Tawanna chatted with the audience. Surprisingly, despite having ten such moments over the three-and-a-half-hour show, she did not mention LGBT support even once.

This unexpected silence shocked her general fans and deeply disappointed her LGBT supporters. Many had eagerly awaited her usual expressions of solidarity, but the night ended without a single word addressing them.

After the concert, frustrated fans who felt abandoned took to social media to vent their anger. They accused Tawanna of betrayal, labeling her a coward and a hypocrite who shifted with the wind. Some claimed her previous support for LGBT causes had merely been a strategy to gain popularity, and now that the political tides had shifted, she had conveniently dropped her stance.

These criticisms gained traction, and soon Tawanna was the target of widespread online backlash.

Backstage, Tawanna had barely returned from her performance when her agent approached her, visibly anxious.

"Tawanna, what's going on with you tonight? Do you realize the internet is exploding with people calling you a fence-sitter? Why didn't you say anything to support the LGBT community?" the agent asked.

Expressionless, Tawanna replied, "From now on, I'll do only what an artist should do in public. I won't voice support for or opposition to any controversial issues anymore."

The agent's eyes widened in shock. "You don't understand! Society overwhelmingly supports them. It's not about your personal beliefs—if you don't speak up, you'll become a public enemy!"

Growing more frantic, the agent added, "We need to issue a statement to calm your fans down and address this before it gets worse."

Tawanna shook her head. "It doesn't matter. I don't feel the need to explain myself to anyone—not to my fans and not even to you."

Turning to her makeup artist, she said, “Please help me remove my makeup.”

Her makeup artist, an openly queer individual and longtime supporter of Tawanna, couldn't contain his disappointment. “Tawanna, do you realize how many people look up to you? How many people in difficult situations see you as a beacon of hope? You let them down! The internet is in an uproar because they feel you've abandoned them!”

Tawanna's composure finally broke. After a long day of suppressing her emotions, she erupted in frustration.

Walking up to the makeup artist, she said sharply, “First of all, I haven't betrayed anyone. I used to speak out because I chose to, and now I choose to remain silent. My mouth, my voice—they belong to me. Just because I've spoken for someone before doesn't mean I've signed my life over to them!”

Her voice grew louder as she continued, “Secondly, everyone has the freedom to make their own choices. I've always respected you and your identity, and that hasn't changed. But do you respect mine? You've worked with me for years, and I've supported you in every way I could. Now that I'm tired and want to step back, you accuse me of betrayal? How is that fair?”

The makeup artist was stunned by Tawanna's outburst. He hadn't expected such an impassioned response.

Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade Chapter 7215

During the performance, there were interactive sessions where Tawanna chatted with the audience. Surprisingly, despite having ten such moments over the three-and-a-half-hour show, she did not mention LGBT support even once.

This unexpected silence shocked her general fans and deeply disappointed her LGBT supporters. Many had eagerly awaited her usual expressions of solidarity, but the night ended without a single word addressing them.

After the concert, frustrated fans who felt abandoned took to social media to vent their anger. They accused Tawanna of betrayal, labeling her a coward and a hypocrite who shifted with the wind. Some claimed her previous support for LGBT causes had merely been a strategy to gain popularity, and now that the political tides had shifted, she had conveniently dropped her stance.

These criticisms gained traction, and soon Tawanna was the target of widespread online backlash.

Backstage, Tawanna had barely returned from her performance when her agent approached her, visibly anxious.

“Tawanna, what’s going on with you tonight? Do you realize the internet is exploding with people calling you a fence-sitter? Why didn’t you say anything to support the LGBT community?” the agent asked.

Expressionless, Tawanna replied, “From now on, I’ll do only what an artist should do in public. I won’t voice support for or opposition to any controversial issues anymore.”

The agent’s eyes widened in shock. “You don’t understand! Society overwhelmingly supports them. It’s not about your personal beliefs—if you don’t speak up, you’ll become a public enemy!”

Growing more frantic, the agent added, “We need to issue a statement to calm your fans down and address this before it gets worse.”

Tawanna shook her head. “It doesn’t matter. I don’t feel the need to explain myself to anyone—not to my fans and not even to you.”

Turning to her makeup artist, she said, “Please help me remove my makeup.”

Her makeup artist, an openly queer individual and longtime supporter of Tawanna, couldn’t contain his disappointment. “Tawanna, do you realize how many people look up to you? How many people in difficult situations see you as a beacon of hope? You let them down! The internet is in an uproar because they feel you’ve abandoned them!”

Tawanna’s composure finally broke. After a long day of suppressing her emotions, she erupted in frustration.

Walking up to the makeup artist, she said sharply, “First of all, I haven’t betrayed anyone. I used to speak out because I chose to, and now I choose to remain silent. My mouth, my voice—they belong to me. Just because I’ve spoken for someone before doesn’t mean I’ve signed my life over to them!”

Her voice grew louder as she continued, “Secondly, everyone has the freedom to make their own choices. I’ve always respected you and your identity, and that hasn’t changed. But do you respect mine? You’ve worked with me for years, and I’ve supported you in every way I could. Now that I’m tired and want to step back, you accuse me of betrayal? How is that fair?”

The makeup artist was stunned by Tawanna’s outburst. He hadn’t expected such an impassioned response.

Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade Chapter 7216

Tawanna's passionate outburst left her makeup artist, Kevin, momentarily flustered. He stammered, "Tawanna, I... I didn't mean it that way. I just think... so many people who rely on your encouragement will feel let down."

Tawanna shot back, "And what about me? Do you think I don't feel disappointed? No matter how much good you do for people, the moment you do something they don't like, they turn on you—attacking, insulting, and threatening you. Is this what being a 'good person' leads to? If this is the reward for being a good person, then I'd rather not be one!"

Without hesitation, Tawanna turned to her agent and said, "Terminate Kevin's contract. Make sure all his compensation is paid by today."

The agent was momentarily stunned but quickly regained composure. "Understood, I'll take care of it immediately."

Kevin's heart sank. His success in the makeup industry was largely due to Tawanna's recognition. She had not only secured him lucrative commissions but also bolstered his fame, earning him millions of followers on social media. This platform allowed him to thrive as a beauty influencer, raking in millions annually. Losing his position with Tawanna would drastically affect his income and reputation.

Panicked, Kevin blurted out, "Tawanna, you can't fire me like this! It's not fair!"

Tawanna responded coldly, "Our agreement was fair when it was made, and as long as the terms of the contract are honored, there's no unfairness in ending it. I know the first thing you'll probably do after leaving is slander me online, but I don't care. You'll still get every cent you're owed."

She paused for a moment before continuing, "Don't argue or try to fight me on this. My decision is final, and I won't change it."

Realizing her resolve, Kevin's tone turned ominous. "Fine, if you insist on firing me, then I promise you'll regret this. I'll make you pay a price you can't imagine!"

He hesitated, then softened his tone slightly, adding, "But I'm giving you one night to reconsider. If you contact me by tomorrow, I'll let today slide as if it never happened."

Tawanna smiled calmly and said, "There's no need, Kevin. Believe me, among all the threats I've faced, yours is the least intimidating. If you think you can hurt me by spreading lies online, go ahead. I'm not afraid."

She continued confidently, "I've made my peace with this. I, Tawanna Sweet, will either overcome this storm or I won't—and if I don't, I'll just leave the entertainment industry. I've made enough money, and even if I walk away today, I'll still earn millions in royalties every year. What do a few rumors matter to me?"

Her voice hardened as she added, “Kevin, if we part ways on good terms, you’ll still have the credibility of being my former makeup artist. That alone will keep your career afloat. But if you choose to go against me, I won’t hesitate to fight back.

“Do you think the public will side with someone who bites the hand that fed them? In their eyes, you’ll just be a nobody who benefited from my generosity and then turned on me. Who do you think will trust or support someone like that? Who will follow a backstabber like you on social media?”

Kevin was left speechless as Tawanna’s words cut through him with brutal precision.