

The Amazing Son in law/

Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade Chapter 7246

When the head of the Tokyo Metropolitan Police Department learned from Mitsui Yoshitaka that hundreds of assassins were killing people inside the Tokyo Dome and were plotting to assassinate the world's top singer, Tawanna Sweet, his face went pale. He immediately asked, "Mr. Mitsui, can you give us a detailed account of the situation at the scene? Are there any casualties?"

Mitsui Yoshitaka, who had endured insults from Charlie Wade all night, finally found an opportunity to vent his frustration. He shouted into the phone, "Baka! Hundreds of people are dead, and you're still asking if there are any casualties? I'm telling you, if you don't get here immediately, you'll be collecting bodies—mine and Miss Sweet's!"

The police chief shuddered. Hundreds of casualties? That would be classified as a terrorist attack in any country.

This situation was far worse than the previous Tokyo brawl that had left many dead.

In the previous incident, the casualties were more dispersed, and the perpetrators varied. The Matsumoto family had killed the Banks family's bodyguards and members of the Takahashi family. The Takahashi family, in turn, killed many of Ito Takehiko's men and nearly assassinated Ito himself.

Ito Takehiko survived and retaliated by wiping out the Takahashi family.

The Matsumoto family was also destroyed, with the culprits being assassins hired by the Banks family from China. The police apprehended these killers while they were attempting to flee at the airport, though Xion managed to escape.

The Tokyo Metropolitan Police Department treated these events as isolated cases, which prevented widespread public alarm.

However, based on Mitsui Yoshitaka's report, this time there were already hundreds of casualties, and the chief feared his career was in jeopardy.

If Tawanna Sweet were to die in Tokyo, he might be forced to commit seppuku or hang himself.

Desperate, he said, "Mr. Mitsui, please hold on! We're deploying all available police forces to the Dome immediately!"

Within moments, dozens of police helicopters across Tokyo took off, racing toward the Dome.

By then, the Dome had descended into utter chaos.

Both the Yamaguchi-gumi and the Inagawa-kai had sustained heavy losses during the gunfight. Using their fallen comrades' bodies, each side hastily constructed makeshift fortifications. A stalemate ensued, with both groups resorting to sporadic gunfire.

Realizing they were at a disadvantage due to the lighting, several Inagawa-kai gunmen decided to destroy the lights, plunging the Dome into darkness.

As a result, both sides were plunged into darkness simultaneously. The Yamaguchi-gumi lost their advantage of sniping from the shadows and saw no immediate chance to break through. They could only hide behind the corpses, cursing the Inagawa-kai for their dishonorable tactics. Despite wanting to retreat, they refused to believe that the hidden bounty had already been taken—no matter how much they argued.

While the stalemate continued, Japan's most mysterious assassin organization, the Bluestone Alliance, comprised of elite mercenaries, had dispatched operatives to the Dome.

This group had been executing assassination contracts on the dark web for years. As long as the price was right, no target was off-limits.

When they learned about the $1 billion hidden bounty, they immediately mobilized all their operatives stationed in Tokyo.

The first 12 fully armed members arrived at the Dome and quickly sensed that something unusual was happening.

Peering through the entrance, they saw only darkness, but the continuous sounds of gunfire and shouting made it clear that the two factions were locked in a stalemate.

The team leader instructed the others, "Wait here at the entrance. I'll sneak inside to assess the situation."

One member protested, "Captain, it's dangerous to go in alone with all that gunfire. Why don't we go in together?"

"No need," the captain replied calmly. "Since there's a stalemate, those inside are focused on each other. In the darkness, I can slip in unnoticed. Plus, I have night vision goggles to help me scout the situation."

He added, "We have strength in numbers, so we need to be cautious. Once I understand what's going on, we'll move in together."

The team agreed with his logic and stopped objecting.

The captain then instructed, "Stay alert. If anyone approaches, don't expose yourselves. Report to me immediately. No one takes action without my approval. Understood?"

The disciplined assassins, unlike the chaotic Yamaguchi-gumi and Inagawa-kai, signaled their understanding with military precision.

With that, the captain donned his night vision goggles and quietly slipped into the Dome, staying close to the shadows along the entrance.

At this point, both sides continued to mimic the trench warfare tactics of World War I, hiding behind their makeshift positions and exchanging fire.

When the captain observed the scene through his night vision goggles, he couldn't help but gasp.

He was no stranger to violence, but he had never witnessed such carnage.

Bodies were used as cover, blood pooled everywhere, and casualties on both sides were immense. The brutality was overwhelming.

The Inagawa-kai members remained unaware of his presence, focused instead on devising strategies. One of them suggested to the leader, "Brother, if this doesn't work, we could retreat and bring in a few cars. We can charge from both ends at the same time, shooting from behind the vehicles. Whoever is in the middle will be crushed!"

The leader nodded vigorously, then slapped the man in the dark and snarled, "Baka! Why didn't you mention such a good idea earlier?"

The man, clutching his face, replied defensively, "... I just thought of it!"

Frustrated by the heavy losses, the leader slapped him again. "Baka! Think faster next time!"

Without hesitation, he commanded, "Hurry! Get a few people to bring the cars!"

Hearing this, the Bluestone Alliance captain was struck by inspiration. The passage was at least two meters wide. If they drove several off-road vehicles in a convoy, even if the lead cars took fire, those behind could push through. This strategy would give them a decisive advantage.

As he prepared to leave and relay the plan to his team, a voice crackled through his headset: "Captain, we have a problem! A lot of cars are arriving—at least fifty or sixty!"

It was the Sumiyoshi-kai.

As one of Tokyo's three major gangs, the Sumiyoshi-kai wouldn't miss such a lucrative opportunity.

Seeing the numerous cars parked outside, they realized others had arrived first. At that moment, a street-savvy member recognized one of the vehicles and turned to the leader in the back seat. "Brother, the Yamaguchi-gumi is here. That's Kameda Masao's car."

The leader scowled. “The Yamaguchi-gumi got here fast! Judging by the situation, they’ve brought at least a hundred people. We only have around 200—we’re outnumbered.”

“What should we do now?” asked his subordinate.

The leader’s mind raced. “Don’t approach yet. Use the cars to block the exit completely. Park them end to end in a circle. We’ll hide behind them and wait for them to come out.”

When the time comes, no matter who it is, as soon as they show their heads, we’ll open fire!”

“Good idea!” The subordinate nodded firmly. Instead of advancing toward the entrance, dozens of cars formed a massive semicircle around the exit, effectively sealing it off.

Even the eleven Bluestone Alliance operatives hiding in the shadows found themselves surrounded.

They quickly reported to the captain: “Captain, they’ve blocked the exit!”

Hearing this, the captain considered having his men drive in immediately, but now he didn’t dare act hastily.

At that moment, more than a dozen Inagawa-kai members began running toward the outside, preparing to drive out.

As soon as they appeared at the entrance, the Sumiyoshi-kai members, hidden behind their vehicles, opened fire.

The Inagawa-kai men, caught off guard, were gunned down almost instantly.

Seeing their comrades fall, the remaining Inagawa-kai members panicked and retreated, shouting, “Brother, it’s bad! There’s an ambush outside! Nearly ten of our brothers are dead!”

“Baka!” the Inagawa-kai leader roared. “Who dares challenge the Inagawa-kai?!”

A confused subordinate replied, “I don’t know, Brother! I didn’t even see who was shooting before we were forced back!”

“Damn it!” the leader cursed. “We’re caught in a crossfire!”

The Yamaguchi-gumi leader overheard and yelled, “Damn it, we’ve been trapped in this mess for too long! Inagawa-kai brothers, let’s join forces and break out together!”

But the Inagawa-kai leader, enraged, fired blindly in the direction of the Yamaguchi-gumi, shouting, “Bakayaro! Do you think I’m stupid?! You must have killed Tawanna! You’re just trying to escape under the chaos! I won’t let you get away! If you’ve got the guts, try to break out—let’s see if my bullets can stop you!”
