

The Amazing Son In Law / Super Hero Charlie Wade - Charlie Wade

Chapter 7312

Tawana was very polite to Claire. The two took several photos together and added each other on WeChat.

charlie Wade noticed Tawana's enthusiasm toward Claire but didn't think much of it.

After finishing her makeup for the performance, Tawana's styling team began coordinating the arrangements for her costumes and discussing details of her outfit changes.

Feeling bored, charlie Wade decided to step outside.

Backstage, all the staff were busy preparing for the event. A large electronic clock was prominently displayed, but instead of showing the current time, it counted down to the performance's start.

With two hours remaining on the countdown, the audience began entering the venue.

Outside the entrance, a large number of staff were pre-checking tickets. They didn't verify the match between the person, ID, and ticket but instead focused on allowing ticket holders to pass while keeping those without tickets outside the secure area.

This process significantly reduced the burden on the main ticket-checking channels.

More than a dozen inspection channels were organized by seating areas, ensuring that tickets for specific sections were checked at designated channels. This division effectively managed crowd flow and prevented bottlenecks at any single entrance.

The face recognition system also played a critical role. Domestic attendees swiped their ID cards for ticket verification and facial recognition, while foreign attendees used their passports for the same process.

Most of the audience passed through smoothly and entered the venue in an orderly fashion.

However, a small number of individuals who had purchased tickets through private transactions were denied entry due to identity verification issues. Some even tried to cause disturbances, hoping to gain access. They didn't anticipate that the Aurous Hill police had provided strong support for the event. Those who disrupted order were immediately removed by the police.

By 6:30, most of the audience had entered the venue and taken their seats.

Tawana's music was played as a warm-up, setting the atmosphere.

From that moment, her passionate fans began enthusiastically singing along in chorus.

At 7:00, with just 30 minutes left until the performance, Tawana finished her makeup and began taking deep breaths and doing vocal exercises. This "warm-up" routine is said to help prepare the throat for optimal performance.

Meanwhile, a massive LED screen, towering dozens of meters high, lit up.

The screen played a promotional video for Tawana's global tour, featuring a mix of performance highlights, candid moments, rehearsals, and travel clips.

For her fans, these moments were incredibly special. Many took out their phones to record the video or take pictures, and some even cried as they watched.

At 7:20, all the band members and dancers were ready backstage. Tawana, now dressed in a dazzling, elaborate performance outfit, was also prepared to take the stage.

Interestingly, the band members entered from the end of the T-shaped stage, while Tawana had to head to the front of the stage and use a hidden elevator to make her entrance.

The interior of the T-stage was hollow. Charlie Wade likened it to being inside a mine, surrounded by steel frames for support and a narrow passage that required bending down to walk through.

At the end of the passage, there was a circular elevator. Guided by the staff, Tawana quickly made her way to the elevator's base.

Claire, both nervous and excited, couldn't resist her curiosity and pulled Charlie Wade along to follow and join the fun.

The circular elevator had a diameter of just over one meter. Tawana knelt on one knee and crouched on the platform. Directly above her was the front of the T-stage. To prevent fans from noticing anything unusual, the top of the elevator was covered with opaque paper, ensuring the stage surface appeared seamless and enhancing the surprise of her entrance.
