

The Amazing son in law Chapter 7434

Tawanna deliberately spoke those words in front of the live broadcast camera, sending shockwaves across the globe and instantly shattering the defenses of British and French netizens.

Among them, British netizens were the most affected.

They suddenly realized this wasn't the first time the British Museum had come under fire recently.

Previously, some Egyptians had streamed live from inside the museum, pointing to the mummies and their coffins, accusing the British of stealing the remains of their ancestors and charging admission to see them.

That incident had already left many British netizens feeling uneasy—though, fortunately for them, those Egyptians weren't widely known online.

But Tawanna is a different story.

She's already the most popular figure in the entertainment world, and over the past few days, she's been making headlines. Right now, it's fair to say she's the most-watched person on the planet. For someone with that kind of influence to make such a bold statement—no one saw it coming.

Not even her agent.

In that moment, her agent had only one thought: "Big sister, you're insane. Are you never planning to work in the UK again? You're giving up on making money there?"

Desperate, she turned her back to the camera and began frantically winking at Tawanna.

Tawanna saw it—but acted like she didn't.

Of course, she understood her agent's concerns.

But wasn't it all just about money?

If not for Mr. Wade, she would've died in Japan. At that point, what difference would money have made?

Besides, the UK only has tens of millions of people. Even if you had 10 million fans there, that would be a massive accomplishment.

So what if she lost them?

Does she really need those 10 million fans?

Tawanna firmly believes that among those 10 million British fans, at least five million must be able to tell right from wrong.

If our ancestors were wronged, then they were wronged. If even half of the people can understand that, shouldn't that be expected of a so-called gentlemanly nation?

With that in mind, losing five million fans is hardly the end of the world.

So, she simply ignored her agent's frantic expressions and continued speaking with passion:

"I believe every country must confront its history honestly and seriously reflect on it. Only then can society truly progress."

Her agent covered his face and shook his head in disbelief.

The live broadcast from the Old Summer Palace triggered a massive international reaction, causing Britain to lose face temporarily. Meanwhile, Charlie was resting at the Wade family's ancestral home when he began receiving a flood of push notifications on his phone—every one of them related to Tawanna.

British netizens were furious. Some accused Tawanna of distorting facts, others claimed she was rewriting history. But a portion of the population began to self-reflect, acknowledging that their colonial past, when their ancestors plundered the world, was indeed shameful.

Eventually, these two sides began hurling insults at each other, leaving foreign netizens thoroughly confused.

Still, there's no denying that Tawanna's live broadcast gave everyday people in the Western world a more genuine view of China.

Western media has long smeared China with endless negativity. Some, like that infamous North American maple-leaf country, have even gone so far as to warn their citizens that China is plagued by public safety issues, rampant theft, and widespread counterfeit currency—advising against visiting altogether.

Yet after watching Tawanna's live stream, viewers were surprised to see how safe and orderly things actually were. There were no robberies, no thefts, not even any fights.

And the most absurd rumor—the one about counterfeit money—was hilariously debunked. After watching for an entire day, viewers realized there wasn't a single instance of cash changing hands.

