

The Amazing son in law Chapter 7446

Just as Song Ruyu was feeling lost in the unfamiliar surroundings, Abbas approached her and said politely, “Ms. Song, Mr. Wade just called and asked me to inform you to prepare. You’ll assume a new identity and take a special humanitarian aid flight to China tomorrow.”

“Go to China?!” Song Ruyu exclaimed, instantly overjoyed.

She had little understanding of Charlie Wade and wasn’t sure whether she still held any value to him. She constantly worried that he might no longer bother with her now that he had returned. After all, with only a year or two left to live, her chances of survival were slim, and she could hardly be of any use to him. Even if she were tasked with confronting the Po Qing Society, she lacked the strength to pose any real threat.

Just when she had resigned herself to the idea of remaining in Syria to die from the poison, Charlie Wade had unexpectedly arranged for her to go to China!

Struggling to contain her excitement, she asked, “Mr. Abbas, are you serious? My identity is extremely sensitive—the entire Po Qing Society is probably searching for me. Wouldn’t bringing me to China now pose a great risk to Mr. Wade?”

Abbas smiled and replied, “There are certainly risks, but I believe Mr. Wade can handle them. He said on the phone that he will personally meet you at the airport when you arrive in China.”

“This...” Song Ruyu was deeply moved and quickly said, “Please tell Mr. Wade he doesn’t need to go to such trouble. He can simply give me an address, and I’ll find a way to reach him after landing.”

Abbas smiled again and said, “Miss Song, you and Mr. Wade may not have interacted much, but I believe there will be more contact in the future. Generally speaking, Mr. Wade rarely changes his mind. All you need to do is follow his instructions.”

Song Ruyu nodded gently. “Alright. Thank you, Mr. Abbas, for the reminder. I understand.”

She realized that Abbas was offering her thoughtful advice. Since she knew little about Charlie Wade’s personality and ways, it made sense to accept his kindness rather than question it.

From that moment on, Song Ruyu’s heart had already flown to China, thousands of kilometers away.

Though she was fully Chinese by blood and had studied the language and traditional culture since childhood, she had never once set foot in her homeland. The Song family had long depended on the Po Qing Society for survival, preventing her from returning.

She suddenly felt that being able to go to China in the final years of her life was, in some sense, a return to her roots and a redemption for the Song family's bloodline.

The next day.

While Tawana's first concert in Shanghai was in full swing, Song Ruyu had already boarded a military aircraft under the alias Cheng Xiaohui.

Song Ruyu wore a black suit issued by the staff, her long hair neatly tied back. Her cold expression conveyed a sense of professionalism and competence.

Several other young people, also dressed in black, boarded the plane alongside her.

Originally, Lao Sun could have arranged a separate flight exclusively for Song Ruyu.

However, since any aircraft would leave a trace once airborne, a flight carrying only one passenger would easily attract attention from those with ulterior motives. Therefore, to reduce risk, Song Ruyu was assigned to a relatively discreet flight with a larger crew and a more plausible cover.

By the time Song Ruyu boarded, dozens of humanitarian aid team members were already seated in the cabin.

Many of them, upon noticing the individuals in black, assumed they were military personnel.

As expected, shortly after Song Ruyu took her seat, a staff member addressed the aid workers seated in the front cabin: "Everyone, we have highly confidential agents on board today. Please refrain from speaking to unfamiliar passengers throughout the journey. All mobile phones must be turned off and kept out of reach, as required. Thank you for your cooperation."

Most members of the international aid team were volunteers in the medical and educational sectors. Having undergone extensive background checks prior to their missions, they were considered trustworthy. Upon hearing the confidentiality request, they quickly complied and surrendered their phones.

The seats assigned to Song Ruyu and the others in black were spaced out across the cabin, with each person occupying a separate row. They did not engage in any conversation throughout the flight.

These individuals were dispatched by Lao Sun to accompany and protect Song Ruyu. Known for his cautious nature, Lao Sun aimed to ensure there were no security gaps.

Meanwhile, in Shanghai, Charlie Wade declined Tawana's invitation to her post-concert celebration. Instead, he left the venue alone, driving straight to the military airport in northern Shanghai.

At the same time Charlie Wade arrived, a military transport aircraft touched down smoothly.

Military airports do not have terminals. As the plane taxied toward its designated parking area, five vehicles—three large and two smaller—were already positioned nearby.

Once the aircraft came to a complete stop, two boarding ladders were connected to the front and rear doors. A crew member entered the cabin and announced, "Members of the humanitarian aid team, please disembark from the front door. Confidential personnel, please use the rear door. Maintain strict discipline while exiting—no talking or phone use."

Everyone complied smoothly with the crew's instructions, quietly collecting their carry-on luggage and lining up to disembark through separate doors.

Song Ruyu and the other men in black boarded two vehicles, while the rest of the humanitarian aid team lined up and boarded three buses.

The aid team members still needed to complete entry registration procedures at the airport. Meanwhile, after Song Ruyu entered the car, she was driven directly out of the airport's runway area.

Inside the vehicle, the woman in the driver's seat said, "Miss Song, we'll be taking you to the underground parking garage. Mr. Wade is already waiting for you there."

Song Ruyu felt a mix of nervousness and excitement. She softly thanked the woman, then fell into silent contemplation, her mind wandering.

Military airports are typically highly secure. Aside from the runways, which must be exposed due to flight operations, most of the facilities are enclosed and restricted.

All confidential aircraft must be moved into hangars immediately after landing. Likewise, apart from essential logistics vehicles, most other vehicles are parked in the underground garage.

At that moment, charlie Wade's BMW 530 was parked in the underground lot.

The black Hongqi sedan pulled up in front of his car. A woman in black seated in the front passenger seat stepped out and opened the door for Song Ruyu, saying, "Miss Song, you may get out now."

As soon as charlie Wade saw Song Ruyu arrive, he opened his door and stepped out. The moment he laid eyes on her, he was momentarily stunned.

Though dressed entirely in black, Song Ruyu's complexion was strikingly fair. She had a slender figure, well-defined facial features, a straight nose, and two bold, sword-like eyebrows that gave her the aura of a heroic woman.

Yet the instant she saw charlie Wade, a flush of red quickly spread across her pale cheeks.

She stood in front of him with her legs together, visibly shy, nervously pinching the index finger of her left hand with her right. Her voice was soft and slightly trembling: "Mr. Wade, hello!"

charlie Wade noticed Ruyu's nervous expression and smiled. "Miss Song, you seem more reserved than the last time we met. This is China—there's no need to be so nervous or overly polite. No one will harm you here."

Hearing charlie Wade's deep, magnetic voice and seeing his reassuring smile, Ruyu nodded anxiously.

But she knew charlie Wade had misunderstood her.

Her reserved demeanor wasn't due to unease in an unfamiliar place—it was because seeing him again stirred complex emotions. Their identities, and her feelings toward him, had both changed significantly.

charlie Wade, being a straightforward man who didn't grasp the subtleties of romance, failed to notice the real reason behind her nervousness. Thinking the location was too sensitive to linger, he said, "Miss Song, please get in the car. We can talk on the way."

"Okay, Mr. Wade," Ruyu replied quickly.

charlie Wade had already opened the passenger door for her.

With her heart pounding, Ruyu climbed in with a flushed face, pressing her knees together and clasping her hands, feeling a bit uneasy.

After Charlie Wade got in, he started the car and drove away from the airport. As they headed toward downtown Shanghai, he asked, “Miss Song, is this your first time in China?”

“Yes!” Ruyu replied with a firm nod. “I’ve wanted to visit for a long time but never had the opportunity.”

Charlie Wade nodded. “Shanghai is China’s leading economic center and ranks first in GDP. It’s also probably the most fashionable and internationally connected city here. On our way back, you can enjoy the night view. If you’re free tomorrow, I can show you around and let you experience the charm of China’s largest city.”

Ruyu asked nervously, “Mr. Wade, if I walk around Huaxia openly, will it bring you trouble?”

“Not at all,” Charlie Wade replied calmly. “Sometimes, the best way to stay safe is to outthink your enemies. Sara might imagine a hundred places where you could hide, but she’d never expect you to be walking the streets of China.”

Ruyu nodded gently, then asked, “Mr. Wade, is Dingyuan Bo also in Shanghai now?”

Charlie Wade shook his head. “No. Yun Ruge is still in Aurous Hill. I’m not sure if you’ve heard of it. It’s not far from Shanghai—just over three hours by car.”

She asked again, “Do you usually live in Shanghai, Mr. Wade?”

Charlie Wade smiled. “No, I actually live in Aurous Hill.”

Ruyu was a little moved and said, “Mr. Wade came all the way to Shanghai to pick me up. I’m truly flattered...”

“Not really,” Charlie Wade replied with a faint smile. “I just happened to have work here these few days, and it just so happened they arranged for you to arrive here, so I came to pick you up.”

After speaking, Charlie Wade glanced at her and added with a smile, “I’ll be working in Shanghai for a few more days, so you can stay with me here during that time. Once I’m done, we’ll head to Aurous Hill together. I’ll arrange for you to meet Yun Ruge then. If you’d like, you can even live with her.”

Ruyu’s delicate face lit up with surprise. “Mr. Wade, you... you’re such an extraordinary person. Why do you still need to work? Is there really anyone in the world who can afford to hire you?”

charlie Wade smiled and said, “I have two identities. One is the person you see now—someone who doesn’t need to work for anyone. But in Aurous Hill, I have a family and friends. They don’t know who I really am, so in their eyes, I’m just a hardworking man with a normal life and a good family.”

Ruyu asked in astonishment, “Mr. Wade, you’re already married?”

“Yes,” charlie Wade nodded. “I’m married.”

Ruyu was surprised. Recalling what charlie Wade had just said, she couldn’t help but ask, “Mr. Wade, does your wife not know about your real identity?”

charlie Wade shook his head. “No, she doesn’t.”

“Oh my...” Ruyu sighed. “Mr. Wade, you’re really good at hiding things—just like the men in our Song family.”

charlie Wade wasn’t very familiar with the specific roles the Song family had played in the Poqing Society over the years, so he asked, “What about the men of the Song family?”

Ruyu explained, “To provide the Wu family with safe and loyal wives, the men of the Song family often enter the secular world, conceal their identities, and marry ordinary women. After their wives give birth, they return to the Song family with the children and vanish from those women’s lives. So the wives never know who they actually married.”

charlie Wade suddenly felt a twinge of guilt.

Because what Ruyu said wasn’t wrong. In a way, like the Song men, he too was hiding his identity from the one closest to him.
