Chapter 1131 I'd Advise You Not To Go

Jenny glanced at him. "You seem to be doing well these days." "Of course I am."

The moment the words left his mouth, Zack glanced at the ward behind him. Thankfully, Gilbert hadn't heard him. "But I'd never compare to you, Jenny. How was the honeymoon with Alec?"

"What honeymoon? Don't you be cheeky," Jenny huffed. They weren't even married.

Zack covered his smile. "It's just a different way of saying it."

"Oh, I can't be bothered with you. Go find Janet or something." Jenny stood up to leave. However, she didn't leave the hospital. She went to Gavin Porter's, the director, office instead to tell him that she was back and ready to work.

"It's alright. You haven't used up all your annual leaves yet. You can have a few more days off." Gavin did not agree to her request to start working.

Marigold was still grateful. 'Alec is your boyfriend now. He might have listened to you if you told him not to save my brother.'

Paul would not have come out of the police station so easily if it weren't for Alec's help.

"That's between him and Alec. It has nothing to do with me." Jenny didn't think that Marigold needed to thank her. She had done nothing, after all.

As they spoke, Alec's car stopped by the entrance.

"Let's go." Alec rolled down his window and got Jenny in the car. He saw Marigold standing next to her and said, "You can sit in the back. Paul is in the car, too."

They'd just come out of the police station. Alec had come for Jenny before dropping him home.

Paul was stubborn, but Marigold was sensible. She said at once, "Let's listen to Alec. Let's all sit down and talk it out. Then everyone can be on their way without affecting anyone."

Paul said nothing, so Jenny took that as a yes. She sent Gilbert a text, to which Gilbert replied, "Okay."

She sighed in relief. If everyone could talk it out, things wouldn't go south so quickly.

Alec drove the Wagner siblings home and then left.

"Send me to my apartment. The one near the hospital," Jenny said.

However, Alec didn't listen to her. "You're not thinking of living separately from me, are you?"

It was Jenny's first time on the third floor. Before, she had only gone to the study on the second floor for a while. She had not gone up to the third floor.

When she got up there, she realized that there were only two rooms on the floor. Besides Alec's, the rest seemed to be specially prepared for her.

She pushed the door open and went in. Although it was said to be just one room, it was huge. However, it was already filled.

A drawing room greeted her. Two plush pink couches sat in the room. It was an adorable sight. She walked further inside and found an especially big walk-in closet.

She wasn't exaggerating at all. It was huge.

There used to be five rooms on the floor, and Alec had turned them into only two rooms. He had probably converted all four rooms into one for her and kept his the same.

It was a hearty dinner. Alec even brought out a bottle of red wine. Jenny had no idea what he was celebrating.

"Have a glass, Jenny." Alec poured out some wine and smiled at her.

Jenny felt that his smile was dubious. She looked at him warily and asked, "You're not thinking of making me drunk, are you?"

Alec didn't quite know how to respond to that. "We haven't really celebrated us getting together before." He couldn't tell what went through Jenny's mind at times. Was he that sort of person?

Jenny smiled dryly and tried to ease the awkwardness. "I was just joking. I know you're not that type of guy."

Alec chuckled. He didn't really push it. They clinked their glasses together and drank the wine.

Jenny and Alec shared a glance. He nodded, indicating that he was alright with anything that she said.

"Everyone should just take a step back," Jenny said. She looked at Paul. "You should know that my brother will never take responsibility for Marigold. Hence, you should let it go."

"What do you think?" Paul was cold. "Gilbert is your brother. Of course, you'd help him."

"I couldn't force him to do what he doesn't want to do even if he wasn't my brother," Jenny retorted. Paul was unwilling to solve the problem.

Paul sneered. He wouldn't have paid attention to Jenny if it weren't for Alec.

"Gilbert, this might not be your responsibility, but it has already happened. You have to compensate them in some way." Jenny looked at her brother. She was indeed there to resolve their problem. She didn't want them to hold this against each other.

Gilbert left the bar after writing the check. It was then that Marigold came out from behind the screen. She had already calmed herself down. Besides the redness in her eyes, nothing else was shown on her face.

"I don't know what you see in him!" Paul was a little angry to see her.

Marigold said nothing and sat at the side. Jenny slid the check over and said, "I know you don't want to contact him often, but for the child's sake, you must take this money."

"You don't have to tell me to. I will." However, the amount written on it made her gasp.

She looked at Jenny and then at Paul, who snorted and said, "This isn't even a lot."

"Is this too much, Jenny?" Marigold ignored her brother. Even to the Wagners, it was not a small sum.

Jenny shook her head. "He can earn the money back. It's not much. Only enough to ensure that you can raise the child stress-free."

Chapter 1138 A Couple of Lovebirds

Jenny looked at Alec, who was driving the car. 'Aren't you going to the company?' "I am." He'd just arrived, and a mountain of work was waiting for him in the office. However, he wanted to accompany Jenny for a while longer, so he was not going there yet.

Jenny read his mind and said, "We have lots of time, Alec. We don't have to be together all the time. Do you know what I mean?"

If Alec left his work to see her like this in the future, Jenny would start thinking she was affecting him.

"I know. Don't worry. I'll handle the things in the company." Alec nodded with a smile. "I'll just send you back."

"Take me to the shopping mall. I invited Stephanie out," Jenny said quickly.

Alec nodded. 'Okay.'

"You think there was anything wrong with Gilbert not liking Marigold, but she Paul cant compare to my brother.' Jenny felt Stephanie, she didn't like him at all. Hence, she'd want to help blame her. He smiled. "Of course. They cant mall entrance. Stephanie happened to be getting down from a cab, as well. When she saw them, she ran up to greet them. "Jenny! Mr. Faust! Congratulations on your win, Mr. Faust," Stephanie teased.

Chapter 1139 They Are Going To Marry

They held hands as they walked into the mall and talked about Jenny's recent events as they shopped. Once Stephanie learned everything, she said, "Evan really went too far. Did he honestly think he could trap you in there forever?"

As Jenny's long-time friend, she knew that even if Jenny couldn't find an escape plan quickly, she would never give up and spend the rest of her life with Evan.

Jenny smiled bitterly. She would probably never understand what went through Evan's head, but she guessed that with all their years apart, Evan no longer understood her.

"Well, what about you and Alec? You didn't agree to be with him just because he saved you, did you?" Stephanie didn't think that Jenny would be so impulsive. If she were the type to agree to be in a relationship because of one kind gesture, she would have gotten together with Evan ages ago.

Jenny was quiet for a bit before speaking. "We probably fulfilled our destinies by being together. If it weren't for Evan's scheme, I might have gotten together with him long ago."

Chapter 1140 I'm Joining You For Dinner

"When are you and Alec planning to marry?" Stephanie directed the topic of the conversation toward Jenny and Alec. "Oh, I mean, remarry."

Jenny had nothing to say to that. "It's still early." Jenny still had yet to plan a marriage.

"I envy you so much. You are all marrying and getting together, and I'm still single," Stephanie exclaimed sadly.

Jenny didn't pity her. Instead, she rolled her eyes. "There are so many people out there willing to be in a relationship with you. But do you want to? It

"I do." Stephanie just wanted a normal love story, unlike her incident with Paul.

"Then try it out with Leonard," Jenny suggested.

Stephanie pursed her lips and said softly, "TH see. Who knows if he actually likes me? I don't want to overdo things."

"The choice is yours. As long as you won't regret it." Stephanie may be her good friend, but she couldn't make the decisions for her. Things like love had to be sorted out on her own.
