Chapter 1181 I Don't Know What You're Talking About

Lynette refused to listen to Graham, but he went on anyway, "Nettie, I married Rowena Glass because I fell into her trap. We have long since divorced.'

"You're divorced?" She didn't know about that.

"I have never loved her. You're my one and only love,' he confessed.

Her eyes brimmed with tears, for she shared the same affection. Still, the thought of Eric's wicked tricks stopped her from confessing her true feelings. "Thank you for your love, but I'm doing well now, and I do not wish to be disturbed. Leave this city with Jenny if you care for my best interest. Do you know how much danger you'll put her in?"

"I know. Jenny is quite stubborn, especially after learning that your life isn't all roses with Eric. We agreed to leave the city with you." He added, 'Nettie, Jenny is our daughter. We have owed her a lot over the years, but she

At the event hall, Jenny engaged Eric in a talk. Anyone watching would think they were serious about the business partnership, but Eric knew all too well that Jenny was buying time. He downed the red wine in his glass and gave her an emotionless look. "Was that enough time?"

"What?" She appeared puzzled.

"You were buying time. Was that enough?" He chuckled as his gaze wandered to the restroom. Lynette seemed to have walked in that direction.

Jenny smiled at his cleverness. "Mr. Dafoe, it seems you care a lot about my mother."

Jenny spotted Graham standing not far away from the hotel entrance and approached him. "Dad, how was the talk with Lynette?" she asked.

Graham had a complicated look on his face mixed with slight concern." She said she wont leave with us and requested that we leave Bayside City."

"Cut that nonsense, Dad. I don't care what she said to you. Most importantly, what do you think about her life with Eric Dafoe?" Lynette would definitely refuse to leave because she was concerned for Graham and Jenny's safety. Jenny hadn't had much chance to interact with Eric, but she could tell the man was no angel.

After her question, Graham shared his thoughts, "She's in the exact situation as the information you gathered on her. Eric Dafoe probably doesn't treat her well."

"That's good enough. Once we confirm that, we will leave with her no matter what. We can't leave her behind to suffer." Lynette was, after all, her biological mother, and Jenny wasn't heartless.

Lynette almost lost it a few times and wanted to beat up the rascal, but she couldn't because Eric doted on his son.

"Eric Dafoe, have you never told your son what actually happened? You pressured the Bells for my hand in marriage. Did you think I'd marry you otherwise?' She was truly angered. After being forced to marry Eric, Eric's son accused her of being a mistress, and she refused to take that lying down.

Eric's expression soured. 'You said you didn't want to marry me? Who would you prefer, then? Graham Walter?'

She shouldn't take his silence on the way back home as his forgiveness.

In the end, Pete left the mansion in a storm of rage, and one wondered if he had taken Lynette's words to heart.

Just as she let out a sigh of relief, Eric went up to the second floor and stood in front of her. Before she could speak to him, he grabbed her by the neck. "So, did you meet Graham Walter? Did he get intimate with you?"

It turned out that Eric wasn't as unbothered as he appeared on the surface. To him, Lynette was his woman, and regardless of whether he actually loved her, no other man should touch her. He was silent on their way home because he was figuring out a way to teach her a lesson. What could be done to scare her into not seeing men behind his back?

After racking his brains, he concluded that a beating was the most effective.

"Let go of me!" Her attempts to push him away were futile. "Eric Dafoe, you're a sick man!"

"I know, and I hope you won't resent her. It's all my fault that she had to leave." Things wouldn't have ended this way if he were capable enough to keep Lynette by her side.

Jenny didn't seem to mind as she brushed it off. "Both of you shouldn't feel guilty at all. I was living a good life at Orchid Village. And you hired all those teachers to give me lessons. You played a role in shaping my success today."

Although Graham had never once visited her at the village, she found the teachers he hired very helpful and meaningful.

After an excruciatingly lengthy silence, Pete gave in and asked, "When did you recognize me?"

"First of all, you bear some resemblance to your father," she explained. "Secondly, I looked into the Dafoes before this. Not only do I know you well, I am privy to the matters of all your family members.' If people in the Dafoe family tree stood before her, she might recognize and name them better than Pete could.

At this point, Pete's smile was wiped off his smug face, but he soon emerged from his silence as he recalled the main goal of his meeting with Jenny. "Is that so? That's great. I don't even have to introduce you to all of them next time."

"What?" She was perplexed, as though she hadn't figured out the meaning behind his words.

"I'm single, I shall allow you to date me." He sounded rather frivolous and seemed to believe that it was Jenny's good

Pete gathered himself with a shocked look on his face. "Aren't you going home? Are you not worried that your dad is dying?"

"Don't worry. He won't die." She sounded confident because she had made the security arrangements according to her investigation into the Dafoes' dispatchable security.

As long as Eric Dafoe did not send his full force, the villa would be safe. And she was confident that Eric wouldn't do so, because he wanted to get rid of Graham with his own hands.

"So, Mr. Dafoe, is my proposal attractive?" She was more interested in Pete's reply.

Chapter 1189 Are You Using Me?

Jenny was ready to leave, but she was not leaving alone. Looking at Pete, she requested, 'Now, please send me home.' "Are you asking me to send you home?" He furrowed his brows, displeased at her orders.

She smiled and added, "Eric Dafoe's men are watching me nearby. They will make a move once I walk out alone. I'm not scared of them, but I don't like wasting my time warding them off. I need to get home as soon as possible to check on my dad. Got it?"

Pete, who was initially confused, finally understood the situation. 'Are you using me?"

"How can you say that? As partners, you should ensure my safety. Don't you think so?" She lifted a brow at him, feeling completely justified.

Pete was unhappy but had to follow her instructions. After all, the last thing he wanted was to see Jenny harmed. They left the lounge and got into his sports car.

"I don't mind acting shamelessly in front of you." He held her and refused to let go.

Suddenly, they jumped at the wry cough from the second floor. Jenny immediately broke free from Alec's arms. Graham descended from the stairs, acting as though he didn't witness the intimate act.

"Jenny, you're home. Did you run into any trouble?*

"Dad, I'm fine. How about you? You're not in shock, are you?" She collected herself, putting the attack at the back of her mind.

Graham joined them in the living room and sat across from them. "This is not my first time-I'm experienced. Why would I be in shock?"

"Sure, you're amazing,' she jokingly complimented him. After that, she told him about the suggestion to work with Pete Dafoe, to which he responded with worry.
