Chapter 1211 I Can't Die

Jenny's words struck deep, and Faye's face instantly turned pale. She bit her lip, still unwilling to admit defeat. "My brother will explain everything, and I believe Alec won't hold it against us."

"Is that so?" Jenny raised an eyebrow. "If you're so confident, then why did you come to see me today?"

"Well, I came to the hospital for a checkup. What else would I be here for?" Faye shot her a resentful look, which cracked Jenny up. Then, Faye took out her medical record and handed it to Jenny. "You performed my surgery, and I still trust your medical skills, Dr. Walter. So I hope you will take care of my follow-up treatment."

Jenny glanced through the medical record and said calmly, "Your condition seems stable, with no major issues. What do you need me to take care of?"

Pete shook his head. He really didn't know, but he felt uneasy inside, sensing it might not be good.

But the reality turned out to be different from what he had expected. Eric sighed and continued, "I will visit the Walters again, but this time, there's a good chance I won't return. So, before I go, I need to explain a few things to you."

Pete was stunned.

Eric ignored his reaction and continued, 'Although I still have some doubts about your abilities, the Dafoe family will eventually be handed over to you. So, I plan to explain some family matters to you in these two days. I know you have been dissatisfied with me all these years, and I don't expect you to understand me. But if I really can't come back, you must hold up the Dafoe family for me.'

The upcoming week was not peaceful for Jenny at all. On the one hand, she was preparing for Eric's visit to Walter Castle. On the other hand, Faye kept visiting her at the hospital every few days.

Jenny was annoyed. Wasn't Faye supposed to win Alec over? Why was she coming to her instead? Could it be that she was hoping Jenny would give up voluntarily? How naive of her.

Of course, that wasn't what Faye had in mind. She came to find Jenny not because she wasn't going to find Alec, but because Alec refused to see her. She couldn't even catch a glimpse of him, so how could she try to win him over?

Therefore, she could only choose the next best thing, which was to appear by Jenny's side. She knew that Alec came to pick up Jenny from work every day, and she could take the opportunity to see him.

"Dr. Walter," Faye called as she entered the room. She was surprised to find Alec in the consultation room and broke into a smile.

Time seemed to have stopped at that moment, but fortunately, Faye's heart was strong enough to take the blow, so she wasn't too affected by it. She tried to calm herself down and forced a smile while saying, "Alec, I know you only treat me as your little sister, but it doesn't matter. In my heart, you've always been my brother. Although we had some unpleasantness before, and I hurt Dr. Walter because of my immaturity, I have changed now and won't do those things again." She was sincere, her eyes slightly reddened.

She thought that Alec would respond to her sincere words. However, when she looked at him, she realized that Alec's gaze was never on her. But on Jenny the whole time. She wasn't even sure if Alec had heard her words.

This time, Faye really felt like crying, but Alec didn't give her the chance to do so.

"Are you done talking?" Alec asked her.

Faye was stunned but nodded her head.

"In that case, let me tell you clearly that I used to treat you as my little sister, but now I'm not interested in you, nor do I want to treat you as my sister. I think it's better for us to be strangers," Alec said, his tone frosty; he didn't care about Faye's feelings at all.

At the restaurant, what was originally meant to be a date between two people turned into a meal for four instead. It was supposed to be a cheerful meal for a happy couple, but it became a somber and serious occasion.

Jenny looked across the table at Anthony, the person who had saved Alec's life according to what he had told her. He should have died many years ago.

He and Faye actually looked quite similar. They weren't particularly outstanding in appearance. With their thick eyebrows and big eyes, they had the kind of appearance that wouldn't stand out if they were in a crowd.

"Mr. Faust," Anthony said, his tone indifferent. He no longer had the humility typical of a bodyguard.

Alec chuckled and commented internally, "I guess things are different now."

Alec looked at Anthony and remained silent for a long time. He'd never expected such an answer. Was it necessary to weave such a big lie just to keep Faye alive?

Moreover, how did Anthony know that he wouldn't be willing to pay for Faye's treatment? At that time, Anthony was his confidant, and as long as he spoke up, Alec wouldn't refuse.

While he was silent, Anthony continued speaking, "Actually, I have my own selfish motives for doing this. You always act so high and mighty, like you're a god from the heavens. But I thought even someone as extraordinary as you could be outsmarted. This at least proves that I'm not inferior to you-I'm just not as fortunate as you in my birth status."

Upon hearing this, Alec, who was feeling a little sorry, instantly regained his composure. He looked at Anthony coldly and said, "So, you think that now that you're in charge of the Wardleys, you're qualified to sit here and talk to me?"

Jenny glanced at Faye and said bluntly, "Whether or not I am talking nonsense is not important. What's important is what are you playing at? Your brother doesn't think highly of Alec, so why are you bugging him? I don't understand you and your brother's logic."

Faye's expression stiffened. In fact, Anthony didn't agree with her coming to find Alec.

"This is my business. It has nothing to do with my brother," Faye spoke up and gave Jenny a cold glare.

Jenny was unbothered as she sneered, "This has nothing to do with your brother? You've really taken your brother's efforts for granted. You should know that he spent so many years pretending to be dead for your sake. And now you treat him like this?"

"Jenny!"

"If I were your brother, I would regret saving you in the first place. If I knew things would come to this, I would've let you die," Jenny continued, ignoring how livid Faye looked.

When Jenny was talking with Anthony, Alec didn't interrupt. To him, Jenny's thoughts were his thoughts, so he didn't need to repeat them.

After Anthony and Faye left, the dishes on the table were barely touched. Jenny smiled and looked at Alec. "Now, no one will disturb us while we eat. n

"Yeah." Alec nodded; his gaze toward Jenny was extremely tender. "Jenny, I really liked the way you stood up for me just now."

Jenny smiled and put some food on Alec's plate. "You're my boyfriend now. Of course, I have to speak up for you."

"You're so overprotective of me when I'm just your boyfriend. When I become your husband, you'll wage wars for me, wont you?" Alec teased.

Jenny didn't answer the question and silently ate her food. She thought there was still a long way to go before she would become his wife.

Lynette watched as Eric fell unconscious, feeling a flurry of emotions. "Is he...dead?" she asked apprehensively.

"No, he's just passed out from the tranquilizer gun we just used. Jenny says that someone like him needs to face the full consequences of his actions through the legal system. He shouldn't be granted a quick and easy death," Leonard replied before ordering Eric to be taken away.

Before leaving, Leonard turned back to Lynette and said, "You can rest assured that you won't see Eric again in your lifetime unless something unexpected happens."

Lynette was stunned, tears blurring her vision as she watched Leonard's figure draw further away. She was unable to utter even a single word.

Graham approached her and pulled her into his arms, comforting her with a soft voice, "Nettie, it's all over now. From now on, you can live the life you want."

"Is it really over?" Lynette asked, still somewhat dazed.

While sitting in the car, Jenny looked out the window. Lynette's "thank you" reverberated in her mind.
For some reason, there seemed to be a boulder pressing on her heart, making it hard for her to breathe.
Alec was driving, but he could sense the gloomy air around Jenny.

"Jenny, are you thinking about Lynette?" he asked.

"Yeah, I'm thinking that she wasn't really in the wrong back then. She hasn't exactly led a good life for the past few years, and she's suffered even more than me. But I still won't acknowledge her as my mother. Do you think I'm being unreasonable?"

She'd been pondering this question since they left Walter Castle, but she still hadn't come up with an answer.

Alec slowed down the car and said, "You don't need to put so much pressure on yourself. I believe that Lynette can understand your inner conflict. It's okay if you can't address her as your mom out loud right
