Chapter 1391 Gilbert and Marigold (66)

In a crucial situation like this, Jenny didn't want to leave Marigold and the child alone. "It's okay. I'll stay here to be with you two. The hospital will be fine."

Marigold wanted to say more, but she knew that she wouldn't be able to change Jenny's decision. She could only thank her.

Jenny was worried that Marigold would overthink at home, so she decided to take her shopping. She was a woman, after all. They could shop her frustrations away.

Marigold didn't object to it. She was thinking of bringing Caleb out for a spin.

The driver brought them to the mall. A bodyguard and a nanny kept close to them. Since Caleb didn't need to be personally attended to by them, it was a relatively relaxing shopping experience.

"Let's get some clothes for Caleb," Jenny said.

Jenny wanted to laugh when Lottie called Gilbert "Bert.* She had no idea how Gilbert was keeping it together.

She said nothing, looking at Gilbert.

Gilbert's gaze was gentle. He looked at Lottie as if she were his lover. "I'm fine with anything. You can decide."

"Let's have a meal together. Miss Walter." Lottie invited Jenny after getting permission from Gilbert.

Jenny hadn't wanted to agree because she was afraid of spoiling Gilbert's plans. But she could feel that Lottie was glancing at Marigold from time to time and sensed that she was challenging her. Jenny smirked. 'Alright. But I'll have to bring a plus one.'

Everyone was shocked to hear her speak so suddenly. Lottie was stunned, and she explained, "You've misunderstood. That's not what I meant. I just think that if the child follows his father, it'll help him develop better, and you'll be less stressed."

"I don't need your concern. I can raise my child alone," Marigold snorted. She did not hold back at all.

Lottie looked unpleasant. Gilbert had no choice but to step in. "We'll have our own child together. And whoever likes it the most will get to keep it."

Although they knew that Gilbert had meant this for Lottie to hear, Marigold found it extremely upsetting.

She looked at Gilbert, and for a moment, she was unable to tell if he was being genuine. She thought of all that Gilbert had said to her last night, saying that he didn't like Lottie and had no intention of marrying her.

But he looked to be truly in love. Marigold didn't think she could tell if he was faking it.

Marigold was miserable throughout dinner, but she persevered till the end without being too dramatic. After dinner, they walked to the entrance of the shopping mall.

Gilbert went to get the car. Lottie stood with Jenny and Marigold. Watching Gilbert leave, she turned toward Marigold. "I heard that you used to like Gilbert very much.*

'It's all in the past. It's not worth mentioning.'" Marigold didn't want to talk about it. She was afraid that Lottie would see that she still liked Gilbert. Most importantly, she was afraid that Gilbert's plan would be ruined.

Lottie smiled. "That's true. The past is the past. You're such a nice person. You'll definitely be able to find someone better suited for you in the future."

Marigold pursed her lips.

Gilbert soon brought the car over. Lottie was about to get into the car, but before she did, she suddenly turned to Marigold and said, "Gilbert and my engagement party will be in a few days' time. If you have the time, you're more than welcome to come and witness our love for each other."

Gilbert drove to Jenny's villa, but he was in no rush to get down. He didn't unlock the doors, either. He obviously wanted to talk to Marigold.

But Marigold evidently didn't want to. "I want to take my child and leave." She was afraid. What if Gilbert and Lottie married and took her child away? She no longer believed in love. The only thing she believed in was her child. Gilbert tightened his grip when he heard that. 'Marigold, the engagement is only for Esther to see. I have no feelings for Lottie."

'Who knows? People change. You said you didn't have feelings for me, too.' Marigold found this all very amusing. Perhaps this was fate.

Gilbert wanted to keep explaining, but Marigold did not give him the chance to. "Just let me and Caleb leave. If what you say is true, you can come to find us once everything is over."

And if Gilbert didn't come looking for her, the truth would unfold itself, and she would give up all hope.

Gilbert understood that Marigold had already made up her mind, and he was powerless to change it. "Fine. But I must arrange for someone to be by your side."

Chapter 1396 Gilbert and Marigold (71)

Gilbert and Lottie's engagement party was held at Bardoff Grand Hotel on Saturday.

A ton of people showed up to their engagement party.

After all, the Bradshaws and the Silveras were pretty big names in Bardoff City, and plenty of the other families knew of their true wealth.

They all came to attend the party.

Jenny and Alec had both received invites.

Jenny was Gilbert's sister, and on top of that, they represented the Walters and the Fausts. It was to be expected.

At first, Jenny didn't want to go. The party held no meaning to it. It was just a show put on for Esther. It would be a complete waste of her time.
