Chapter 641 Must I Give You a Reason for Not Liking You?

With that, Jenny turned around to leave. Brandon watched her retreating figure in silence. He couldn't help but wonder who would lead the Walters in the future. Previously, he firmly believed it was Jolene, but the more he thought about it, the more he felt she lacked the ability. It was Jenny who had what it took.

He sighed and gave up. Even if Jenny was the one, he couldn't marry her. That woman was much harder to deal with than Jolene.

Footsteps from the living room entrance interrupted his thoughts. James thought it was Jenny returning, but when he looked up, he saw Jolene instead. His smile disappeared, replaced with a blank expression.

Jolene walked over and sat next to him, blinking at him. "James," she said, hoping to appear cute.

However, James wasn't a good person. He only pretended to be kind and gentle in front of Jenny. If it were someone else, he wouldn't bother dealing with them.

Jolene wasn't discouraged and continued, "James, you don't really think

Just as Jolene was overwhelmed, Graham came down from upstairs, glancing coldly at her before quickly looking away. Having been called down by Graham, Rowena was right behind him. She was a bit puzzled, wondering why Graham would call her at this hour.

"James, it's late. I'll have the driver take you back," Graham said, not wanting outsiders to be involved in his family's affairs.

"Alright. I'll return home and visit another day," James said.

Graham nodded, looking more favorably at James now, convinced that excellent people attracted other excellent people. Jenny was so outstanding that she drew James in, who was equally as outstanding.

Jolene charged at Jenny, ready to beat her up, but Jenny was unruffled, showing no intention of dodging.

Graham slammed the table, and Jolene was shocked by the loud sound. She stopped in her tracks and didn't get to Jenny.

"You rascal!" he roared. "Jenny is your sister!"

"I don't have a sister! I'm my mom's only daughter!" Perhaps, she had been emboldened out of anger or her strong refusal against marrying Brandon Britt. She talked back to Graham despite fearing him.

The scowl on his face deepened. "If you dare speak in this manner in public, I'd put you in your place!"

Jenny instantly made a call to Alfred upon reading his texts. "So, are you going to compete?"

He was slightly surprised by her huge reaction. ' Why? Are you scared that I'd leave?"

"You're overthinking. Look, you're talented but not irreplaceable," she denied, but deep down, she was worried that her company would lose him. Jeneration Group had newly gone on track, and Alfred's untimely departure would only cause her to suffer. Still, she wouldn't stop him from leaving if he wished to. Everyone had the freedom of choice, and she had no right to stop him.

Alfred smiled helplessly at her denial. "You're a stubborn one. Don't worry. I won't leave."

Somehow, she let out a sigh of relief, and she realized that she had overreacted just now. "I'm sorry. I was..."

Rowena brought Jolene to the Glass family's residence.

"Randy." Jolene started sobbing when she saw her cousin. Confused, he hurriedly asked, "What's the matter? Did anyone bully you?"

She quickly updated him on the events at home. At the same time, Randy's dad entered the living room and overheard Jolene's story.

"How sickening!" Wayne Glass bellowed, feeling bewildered at how his sister and niece were treated at home.

Jolene quickly greeted him, "Uncle Wayne."

In the study room upstairs, Wayne was frowning at Randy. 'Get someone to keep tabs on the Walters, especially Graham Walter. I need to know what he's up to lately.'

"Dad, what are you suspecting?" Randy was curious.

"A few of our business contracts ran into problems. I suspect that someone has been sabotaging us." Wayne did not get to where he was without his shrewdness. The problems he identified were minor, but their sudden emergence puzzled him.

Randy immediately grew wary. "Is someone sabotaging us? Who? The Walters?"

'I don't know. It's just a guess.' Wayne started suspecting Graham because the man had recently acted bolder and more irreverent toward the Glasses.

Chapter 647 Who Is This?

Like Jenny had guessed, the Walters and the Britts released a joint statement about the engagement before noon. The engagement event was slated a week later. Not only were the Walter Inc employees gossiping about it, but netizens were also discussing the news. Most sent their blessings to the couple.

In their eyes, the two families were a great match. Jolene would be marrying into wealth anyway, which was definitely better than becoming a corporate slave like the rest of them.

Jenny quickly glanced through the online comments and soon went back to work. It had been some time since her last successful business negotiation. During the period in between, she was occupied by non-work issues. If she didn't get started, her colleagues would think she came to work just to pass the time.

She poured through the information of clients in hand and hesitated on who to approach. Graham had introduced her to many of the contacts in events before, and she was sure they wouldn't turn her down. Still, she didn't like the low-effort process.

When she was deliberating, she got distracted by her ringing phone. Puzzled by the unknown number, she picked up anyway.

She heard an unfamiliar male voice from the other

Randy flashed an earnest smile at her. "I won't do this for outsiders. My generosity is only reserved for family, for example, my dear cousin."

She silently smirked at the remark but did not call him out. The land south of the city, which the Glasses bid, was going to be developed into a business district. Clearly, the area would flourish in the future. But Randy suddenly offered her a partnership in the lucrative project they had just bagged, and it all felt odd to her.

"That's a huge project. I need to discuss it with Dad." More importantly, she needed to do some investigation into the issues behind the land—there must be something. Else, the Glass Family wouldn't have suggested a partnership.

While they were planning to acquire the Glasses' business, the Glasses might also be scheming against the Walters. At the end of the day, the Glasses were no saints.

After that, they engaged in a pleasant conversation, or so it seemed to Randy and the others.

Jenny, on the other hand, never entertained the idea of working with the Glasses. That family was going down soon anyway.

"I need to go to the restroom." She left the table.

Seeing that, Randy called his father and shared some updates about his lunch with Jenny.

She had no idea about the call, occupied by another pressing matter. A man had showed up in front of her, his figure towering over her. He seemed surprised to run into her.

"They look great together," Blake remarked casually, attracting Alec's gaze. She hurriedly clarified, "The Walters and the Glasses might be relatives, but Jenny and Randy are not blood-related. Everyone knows that."

Although Graham presented Jenny as his and Rowena's long-lost daughter, everyone was clever enough to figure out that Rowena was not Jenny's birth mother.

Alec was irked by the reminder that Jenny and Randy were not blood-related. Their existence seemed unusually jarring to him when he looked at them again.

"Let's go," Blake urged. He nodded and left with her. He didn't expect to run into Jenny during his business meeting at the restaurant, and he was even more surprised to see her dining with Randy.

Once Alec and Blake were gone, Randy shifted his focus back to Jenny. ' Isn't that guy your ex-husband?"
