Chapter 791 Have You Been Shot?

When Jenny arrived at the scene and saw the madness, she grabbed the steering wheel and crashed the car in front of the mercenaries to stop them from shooting at the hostages. Then, she hopped out of the car and walked over to Graham and James, taking off her ski mask. 'Dad, James.'

"Jenny, I know you wouldn't let us down.' James was glad but unsurprised to see her, for he knew she'd come to their rescue.

On the other hand, Graham, who looked a little pale, forced a smile at her." Jenny, I have nothing to worry about if you're this capable."

"Let's get into the car and talk after we leave." She was worried that Kevin and his men in the first car might turn back. Even though it was an impossible scenario, she didn't want to risk it.

Chapter 792 They Can't Escape

In an inn near the border, Evan ended the call in relief after learning that Jenny had rescued Graham and James. It was his time to shine now. This was the first time Jenny asked for his help after he returned from abroad, and he was determined not to disappoint her.

He looked at the unassembled gun on the table and picked it up. Within seconds, the gun was assembled. If Jenny was around, she'd be surprised by his proficiency. He stowed it away when he heard a knock on the door." Come in."

One of his men entered the room and reported, 'Boss, the mercenaries have arrived at the border.'" Evan's men were stationed across the border, and they immediately spotted the fugitives who arrived.

Still, they did not make a move without an order from him. "Should we bring our men over?" the subordinate asked.

Evan shook his head. "We're not in a rush. They want to cross the border, don't they? We'll let them cross and wait for them at the end."

It wouldn't feel thrilling enough to capture Kevin and his men right as they were about to cross. Plus, that'd be a waste of the time Evan's men spent preparing at the border. Evan wanted to give hope to the fugitives, who were looking forward to exiting the border after scaling the mountains, only to plunge them into despair at the other end. He couldn't wait to see them breakdown.

After James left, Paul showed up in the room. She was a little taken aback to see him. "What's wrong?" "Your dad..."

"He's fine," she replied with questions in her head. Since when did Paul care about her as a person? She soon learned the purpose of his visit.

"If you have time, you should visit Alec," he urged her. "His room is one floor below. You haven't visited him once since he woke up." He could tell that Alec wanted to meet Jenny, even though his friend never specifically brought it up.

She frowned at Paul quizzically. "Well, that's great to hear, but why should I visit him? You should get Miss Watkins to do that." She had more important tasks; she had to look after Graham while communicating with Evan to prevent any missteps in their border operation.

"Jenny, Alec has regained his memories," Paul explained again.

Chapter 794 He Deserved to Die

When Evan rushed to the hospital, he found Jenny by Graham's bed. She was surprised to see him. "Have you captured Kevin and his men?" "Yes, we caught all of them." He nodded and added, "But I accidentally shot Kevin dead when he fought back."

"Oh, he deserved to die anyway." Jenny didn't harbor any suspicion as she was not surprised at Kevin's refusal to cave in.

A gleam flashed across Evan's eyes when Jenny did not doubt his account. "How's Mr. Walter?" he asked.

"He's doing fine. He just needs to be hospitalized for a few days," she informed him. Later, he stayed back to support her by Graham's side.

In Alec's room one floor below, Paul noticed that Alec was in a bad mood and offered words of comfort, "Something's happened to her family. It's not surprising that she didn't visit you."

"You don't have to make me feel better. I get it." Alec knew that Jenny must be extremely disappointed in him after everything. Even he was disappointed in himself.

Blake was able to give a confident and eloquent speech only because she had prepared her excuse before the visit. Alec indeed suffered from mental health issues before, and as long as that was undisputed, her arguments would stand.

Alec understood her explanation. Before the memory loss, he had noticed an odd development in his obsession with Jenny, which was why he had sought her help to prevent things from getting out of hand. The memory loss that came after was an unexpected development.

"I do not intend to argue on the details, but I'd like to make it clear that our relationship is strictly business. I have no interest in you, and you shouldn't have any feelings for me." He gave her a cold glance. No matter how Blake explained herself, he couldn't bring himself to like her. Still, he needed to keep her around because he had to rely on the Watkins' support.

His words didn't anger Blake. She'd take anything as long as he didn't suggest a breakup. 'Okay. I got it. Our goal is to create a win-win situation, and I'm clear on that. You should have lunch now. We can discuss it later.' She smiled at him and dropped the conversation.

Graham turned back and looked at Jenny. Seeing that she had no reaction, he nodded and said, "Alright then, Miss Watkins and Mr. Faust, take care on your way. I'd see you off, but..."

"No need to trouble yourself, Mr. Walter. Take care of your health." Blake smiled and pulled Alec to leave.

Surprisingly, Alec didn't lose his temper. After nodding to Graham, he followed Blake out. Once they had left, Graham looked at Jenny with concern and asked, 'What's going on between you and Alec?'

"I have nothing to do with him. Don't worry too much about it," Jenny replied. Perhaps because she had experienced too much, she was no longer hung up on love and romance. It would be great if she met someone who also liked her, but it was fine if she didn't.

Jenny was unaware of what her father was thinking. Even if she knew, she would probably be at a loss at how to react.

"Dad, wait here with Evan. I'll go to the kitchen and have a look.*

Since Graham had just been discharged from the hospital, she needed to remind the kitchen staff not to make anything too spicy or heavy.

Graham nodded as she left. After all, he wanted to have a private chat with Evan. After Jenny left, Graham looked at Evan with a smile. "Evan, I heard you just returned from abroad. What are your plans for the future? Are you planning to go abroad again?"

"Mr. Faust, I don't plan to leave again this time," Evan replied. His tone was full of respect.

Graham was growing increasingly pleased with him. Grinning, he said, "I have lived for so many years, and I can see you have feelings for Jenny. Am I right?*

Seeing his persistence, Graham didn't say more. He was willing to grant his request. Although he had already picked out some reliable people to help Jenny, having someone he trusted to oversee the company was still better. Even if Jenny ended up not working at the company later, Walter Inc would have no problem.

If Evan could pursue Jenny and end up with her, that would be perfect. Imagining that, he couldn't stop himself from smiling, which puzzled Evan.

Evan wondered if he had said something funny. "Mr. Walter?" He called out to him. Whether Graham agreed or not, he wanted to hear the answer.

Hearing his call, Graham realized he had been distracted and let out a dry cough. "I have no objections, but I still have to talk to Jenny about it. After all, the company will soon belong to her. If she refuses, I have no choice."

Although he felt there was no reason for Jenny to refuse, he still had to ask her. Since she was about to become the president of Walter Inc, she deserved some respect.

Evan merely laughed. They both knew he wasn't joking. Nonetheless, since Jenny pretended she didn't know, he didn't say more or pressure her for fear of invoking her resentment.

Meanwhile, Graham couldn't help smiling. He had never seen his daughter afraid, which was quite an interesting sight.

He secretly applauded Evan, who smiled and thanked him. It felt good to have his support.

After contemplating it for a moment, Jenny finally agreed. "Evan, I'm glad you work at Walter Inc, but let me tell you first that you should never force yourself to stay because of me. If you don't want to do it anymore in the future, just tell me."

"We haven't decided to do that yet," Alec answered truthfully. After all, they hadn't been together for long, and it was too soon to consider marriage.

"The Watkins and the Faustus are a good match. If you feel it's appropriate, you should set the wedding date soon," Zeke said.

Alec nodded, wondering what his intention was. "Don't worry, I'll take care of it."

Zeke didn't say much after hearing his answer. Instead, he looked at Luke and Julian, scolding them, "What about you two? When are you planning to get married?"

"Grandpa, I haven't even found a girlfriend yet. How can I get married?" Julian pouted, feeling that his grandfather was being unreasonable.

Disregarding his reply, Zeke turned to Luke. After all, he was his eldest
