Chapter 961 A Stalker

Stephanie didn't give Leonard a direct answer, but he wasn't discouraged.

"Then you're in luck. You can see me often in the future." The implicit meaning of his words was obvious. It meant he would appear around Stephanie frequently in the future, giving her plenty of opportunities to see him.

Stephanie didn't reply, as she didn't know how to respond, so she remained silent.

The four of them didn't walk for long. After all, the weather was frigid that day. After Stephanie and Leonard had finished chatting, Jenny suggested that they leave. Alec sent Jenny home, and Leonard escorted Stephanie back.

On the way to Stephanie's house, she and Leonard didn't talk much. During a moment of silence, Leonard noticed a car following them from behind. He had a worried expression on his face immediately, thinking it was someone seeking revenge against him. Making enemies was very common in his line of work.

He sent the license plate number to his colleague to investigate right away. Soon, he received a text and saw the name "Paul Wagner." Leonard glanced at Stephanie out of the corner of his eye.

The next day, Jenny was busy with work at the hospital as usual when she unexpectedly received a call from Evan. It was the first time he'd called her since the incident.

"Jenny, would you like to have lunch with me this afternoon?" Evan's tone was neutral, so Jenny couldn't gauge his emotions behind the question.

She checked the time and realized she had two more hours to go before she ended her afternoon shift. Jenny thought she should be able to finish consulting her patients by that time, so she accepted Evan's lunch invitation.

"Sure," she replied.

After hanging up, Jenny continued to busy herself with work and didn't think much about why Evan wanted to see her.

Two hours later, Jenny met up with Evan at the hospital gate.

Jenny didn't know what Evan was thinking. But when she heard Evan speak about his experience overseas, she naturally assumed that he hadn't been doing well during all those years abroad. As a result, he ended up going astray and taking the wrong path.

She sighed and didn't doubt what he'd told her. "Then, what's next for you? What do you plan to do? Are you going to continue with your current path?"

She had seen Evan's people suffer losses and thought it wasn't feasible for him to carry on in the same way. On top of that, she wasn't exactly supportive of him going down that same road.

"I haven't decided yet." Evan smiled, but inwardly, he wondered what else he could do if not this.

"Evan, now that you've decided to return to the country, let go of everything abroad and start again. Wouldn't that be better?"

She and Evan grew up together, and although she wasn't as close to him as she was with Gilbert and the others, she still didn't want him to continue down the wrong path. Things were different in the country compared to overseas; if Evan continued as he was, he would end up in jail sooner or later. She didn't wish for him to end up like that.

Jenny didn't quite agree with what he said. "Alec may be the mastermind behind the whole Xavier incident, but why did you agree? You know he's using you, yet you still agreed. Did you two reach some kind of a deal?"

Evan wasn't stupid; he wouldn't have made a deal that would only bring him losses.

At that moment, Evan was at a loss for words. Could he tell Jenny he didn't get anything from Alec in return? Alec had threatened to expose his identity to Jenny. He wouldn't have agreed to it if he hadn't been anxious about how Jenny would see him once she found out what he'd been up to.

Who would have thought that Jenny would find out what he'd tried so hard to keep hidden so soon despite his efforts to cover it up?

If he knew it would turn out like that, he should have just told Jenny the truth from the beginning. Then, he wouldn't have ended up being used by Alec.

"I'm grateful that you saved me. But at that time, I think Alec had no choice. After all, he didn't have as many men as you did. Knowing that you had the manpower, it was reasonable for him to approach you for help."

Jenny didn't think there was anything wrong with it. If she were Alec, she would do the same.

Helga's sister and Amy were already waiting at the operating room's entrance. When they saw Jenny approaching, they both hurried over.

"Dr. Walter, the surgery..." Helga's eyes were slightly red, and she couldn't even bring herself to ask the question.

Jenny nodded to her and said, "Don't worry. I'll do my best."

"Okay." She didn't say anything else, fully aware that words were meaningless in a life-or-death situation like this. The only thing she could do was pray hard for her sister.

"Dr. Walter, will my mom be okay?" Amy didn't know what illness her mother had, but she knew her mother was about to have surgery. Her aunt told her it would be painful, so she worried.

Jenny looked down at her and smiled, "She'll definitely be fine, Amy. You have to be good, okay?"

"Okay, I'll be good and wait for my mom to come out." Amy nodded. She was around four or five years old and didn't really understand the concept of death.

Alec took Jenny to the grocery store. They eventually decided to cook at home.

Of course, it was mainly Alec's decision, as Jenny was already tired and wanted to have a quick meal and go home to rest. Alec insisted that she didn't need to do anything and just needed to wait for the food, so Jenny reluctantly agreed to go with him to buy groceries.

"You're the mighty Mr. Faust, yet you're buying groceries yourself. This really damages your reputation as a CEO," Jenny joked as she walked beside Alec, unable to resist teasing him.

She looked at the man, who was six feet tall and dressed in a suit and tie, standing next to her. It looked as if he was there to acquire the grocery store instead of something as banal as buying groceries. He looked very out of place in the grocery store.

"You speak as if CEOs aren't human beings," Alec replied while selecting the vegetables. "Don't we still have to eat like normal people? It's just that we can just delegate many of our tasks to others."

If it weren't for Jenny, he naturally wouldn't appear in such a place.

Things were far from being as good as they seemed. Jenny rarely cooked, so washing the vegetables was manageable, but chopping them up...not so much.

"Dr. Walter, are you just as careless when performing surgery on patients?" Alec picked up the potato strips-or, more accurately, the potato chunks.

Jenny looked a little embarrassed. "I haven't really chopped vegetables before."

"Right, just watch from the side." Alec took the knife from her and didn't let her continue with the chopping.

Jenny became even more embarrassed and obediently stood like a child who had done something wrong. Alec covered up the laughter he was about to let out by clearing his throat and sending her downstairs to buy marinara sauce.

"Do we not have any at home?" Jenny asked. She really didn't want to go out.

I didn't notice we didn't have any," Alec replied. It had been a long time since he cooked at Jenny's house, so he'd forgotten about it. He didn't think buying any

"What are you thinking about? I said dinner was ready, but you didn't respond. Didn't you say you were starving?" Alec was right behind her without her noticing.

Jenny snapped out of her thoughts. "Nothing. Can we finally eat? Awesome!"

She got up and walked toward the dining table.

Alec did have a knack for cooking. In just a short while, he made three dishes and one soup, and they all looked and smelled delicious.

"Alec, if you ever go bankrupt, consider opening a small restaurant. I'll definitely come and support you." With this level of cooking skill, Jenny believed that Alec could make it big if he opened a restaurant.

Alec laughed at her suggestion and handed her a plate. "If I become the boss of a restaurant, will you be the lady boss?"

Jenny was slightly stunned and pretended not to have heard him. "These French fries taste good. Even though I cut them into huge chunks, that doesn't affect the taste, does it?"

"Is that so?" Alec asked in return, clearly implying it would be strange if the taste was the same.

Jenny nodded. "Yeah, it's the same. Don't worry about the slight differences."

Chapter 969 Yakov Takes Over

The atmosphere in the Faust family was oppressive. First, Zeke's eldest son passed away. Then, his eldest grandson was sent to prison. He'd lived many years but had never encountered such a bleak situation.

In the living room, the whole Faust family was silent. Julian looked at his father and grandfather, then turned to his sister for help.

"Isabelle, when can we leave?"

Their grandfather called them over to have dinner, but now he wouldn't let them go. Julian had never liked staying in Faust Manor, so he moved out as soon as he became an adult. He rarely spent as much time there as he did today.

Isabelle gave him a cold look and said, "Be quiet. Can't you read the situation now?"

Julian sighed and muttered, "Actually, I don't think handing the company over to Alec is a bad idea. He's more capable than all of us, and with him managing Faust Group, we can make more money each year. Isn't it good to earn money like that without working hard?"

He couldn't understand why it was so hard for his father and the late Xavier to accept Alec taking over the Faust family.

Before Yakov could even rebuke him, Isabelle, standing beside them, couldn't take it anymore. "Shut up! Do you really think Alec is a good person? If we hand the family over to him, are you sure we can survive?"

"Isabelle..."

"We won't force you to fight for the position of becoming the heir, but you better not repeat those words again," Isabelle interrupted Julian and didn't want to hear him say another word.

Julian murmured a perfunctory "Okay." It was unclear whether he'd really taken his sister's words seriously.
