Chapter 0054

"Follow you," the man David Randolph chuckled before he answered, "You think too much. I am just passing by."

His stone was flirtatious yet weak. She could even hear his heavy breathing.

Renea could only feel that the collar of this man's shirt was wet. She could also smell the familiar scent of blood.

"You are injured?" Renea loosened her hand, and David collapsed on the ground immediately.

He attacked with all his might since he believed Renea was the one who had been hurting him earlier. Now, he was not able to exert any strength, and the wound on his chest caused him to let our heavy grow.

Renea took out her phone and showed the flashlight to him. The blinding light made him squint in discomfort.

Even though David was in a mess at that moment, his delicate features still stood out, and he still looked incredibly good-looking.

Renea went forward to help him out with the study. When she got downstairs, she placed him on the couch.

David had no strength left at this point and could only let Renea do whatever she wanted.

However, once Renea stripped off his shirt, his dignity as a man still caused him to resist a little.

"What are you doing?"

"If I don't tear your shirt open, how I'm supposed to bandage your wound?" Renea slapped his hand away and said.

Renea tore off David's shirt, the wound on his right chest was quite deep, and it was still bleeding.

David lifted his gaze to look at Renea. Seeing that her expression hadn't changed, the corner of his mouth, curled up as he asked, "Aren't you afraid?"

Anyone who saw this wound would be terrified, but she showed no response at all.

Renea ignored him. She just found some gauze and alcohol to clean his wounds.

"The alcohol has not been opened. I have checked it, and its still usable. I have used the alcohol to neutralize the poison in the gauze, but it has been stored for too long, and there have inevitably bacteria. I will bandage for you temporarily to stop bleeding. You had better go to the hospital right away."

Looking at her serious look, the smile on David's face broadened. He paid no mind about how serious his injury was at all.

However, his smile looked somehow playful.

After Renea bandaged his wound, she stood up and said coldly, "It's done!"

"What's your name?" David questioned afterward.

Renea continued to ignore him as she carefully cleaned up the mess that she made when cleaning his wound.

“Aren't you curious about why I was injured and why I hid here?”

Renea, however just replied in a cold tone, “I'm not interested.”

“You are really feisty. Since you don't want to tell me your name, how about I call you Feisty?”

Renea simply stayed silent.

“If you don't speak, I will take it as yes.”

“Feisty, what are you doing here? You seem to so familiar with this place. Is this your old home?”

David asked out of curiosity, but Renea had no intention of replying to him at all.

“I can help you open that safe.”

As soon as Renea heard these words, she reacted and turned to look at David.

Meanwhile, David was also looking at her with a confident smile.

“You help me go upstairs, and I will open it for you. It's a gratitude of for saving my life.”

After Renea hesitated for a moment, she walked up and helped David up.

David then looked at her and said with a smile, “You have a beautiful eye. They look like the eyes of someone I know.”

Renea was slightly startled.

It was the third time that she heard this sentence.

David just smiled but didn't continue. Yet his downcast eyes dimmed.

Later, Renea helped David with the study. She used the flash off her phone to light up the room. Under the dim light, David's face appeared even paler.

Renea then helped him to the front of the safe. David took one look at the lock of the safe before he said with a look of disdain, "The lock is really old."

"The lock was old, but it was not difficult to open," he thought.

"Find me a thing piece of iron wire," David said to Renea as he leaned on the leg of the desk like an old man.

Hearing this, Renea got up in search of an iron wire for him.

"Here you go," She handed over the wire a while later.

With a smile, David accepted the wire. He carefully twisted the iron wire after inserting it inside the lock. Soon, the lock was opened.

It was so effortless that it shocked Renea.

"Done," David cocked his brow smugly.

But when Renea opened the safe, there was nothing inside.

Disappointment could be seen in her eyes.

David could not help but snort, "You spend so much effort just to open an empty safe."

No?

Renea rose to her feet and left. Her eyes had no expression at all. She was not the least bit disappointed with what she had not found.

“Hey feisty, where are you going?”

Renea didn't even turn her head back when she heard David call her repeatedly.

By the time David trudged out of the study, Renea was nowhere to be seen in the house.

On the other hand, as soon as Renea got out of the old house, her cell phone rang

Renea unlocked her phone and a faint smile crept up her face. ‘Well at least it was not completely fruitless today.’ she thought.
