

Chapter 38 I will never leave her until I die.

On the morning of the next day, Mrs. Mandel went to the Hills but Steward had not arrived.

Mrs. Hill was also very excited and anxious, "Since Steward called me yesterday afternoon, I haven't slept well."

Hearing that, Mrs. Mandel was in a rage and thought, "Why had Steward sent her the message so late after giving a call to Nora's mother? And he even turned off the phone after the text!"

Mrs. Mandel said to Mrs. Hill, "Since Steward and Nora will come back together, does that mean they have gotten back together?"

Mrs. Hill said, "I am not sure. But this time, I think we shouldn't interfere in their relationship."

They were waiting for Steward and Nora's arrival but only Steward appeared.

Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Mandel asked together, "Where is Nora?"

"She is in the car," said Steward with a dark face and felt guiltier when he met his and Nora's mother, "I have to tell you something so that you can have mental preparation before you meet."

He was not afraid to admit he had done something wrong but he was afraid that their parents would not approve of them being together.

He did not tell the whole story but told them, “When Nora knew she had brain cancer, she decided to record a video to tell you she was going abroad. Though she survived the surgery, she had been in a vegetative state and it was Mia who had been taking care of her. I found her a few days ago. She had woken up but lost her sight and all her memories.”

“My poor girl!” Mrs. Hill almost cried and fell to the ground. Mrs. Mandel held her and comforted her, “Fortunately, Nora is alive. We shouldn’t cry before Nora in case we would frighten her...”

And then Mrs. Mandel asked Steward, “Is it because Nora found she had cancer that she wanted to have a divorce with you?”

Mrs. Mandel had known that the reason why he did not work these days was that he had to take care of Nora.

Steward nodded and thought he would do anything for the rest of his life to make it up to Nora but at this moment, he could not tell them the truth because it might hurt them. If Nora gained her memories, he thought she would support him.

Mrs. Mandel and Mrs. Hill wiped their tears and went out of the gate to meet Nora.

The car door opened and their eyes started watering.

“Nora, mom is there!” said Mrs. Hill.

Steward held Nora's hands and helped her get out of the car. He whispered in her ears, "Don't be afraid. Do you still remember what I told you?"

Nora nodded and looked at Mrs. Hill with a sweet smile. And then she called her, "Mom!"

Mrs. Hill ran toward Nora and hugged her tightly, crying, "Fortunately, you are alright, otherwise I would die with you..."

"Dear, Steward..." Nora was a little afraid so she started struggling, asking Steward for help.

"I am here. I will hold your hands. It's going to be okay, Nora," Steward replied and held her hands tightly.

Nora calmed down and she liked holding hands with Steward, which made her feel reassured.

She thought her mother's hug was very warm and comfortable.

Then Mia and Gabriel got out of the car and started to comfort Mrs. Hill.

Mrs. Mandel's eyes were still red and she pulled Steward aside, saying in a low voice, "What's going on between you and Nora?"

"As you can see..."

"Are you sympathizing with her?" asked Mrs. Mandel.

She had a reason to ask this question. Before their marriage, Steward refused to marry Nora and after their marriage, he had been indifferent to her and finally signed the divorce paper. “Why did he change his mind?” his mother thought.

Steward shook his head and said firmly, “I am in love with her.”

“When she was healthy, you treated her so badly, and now she is blind and intellectually impaired like a child, you tell me you love her?” Mrs. Mandel still could not believe what her son said.

“Mother, are you judging her?” Steward said with a gloomy face.

“I would never judge her. What I want to say is that if you do not truly love her, you shouldn’t promise to be with her. She now is so dependent on you and your leaving would hurt her again.”

“I will never leave her until I die!”

Mrs. Mandel was surprised by his determined attitude.
