

Blessed 286

Chapter 286 Who Did We Offend

After discussing specific plan for the donation, Jeanne said goodbye to the children and the director before leaving.

Trevor stayed a little longer and then said goodbye to the children.

When he walked out of the orphanage, he saw Jeanne who was waiting for him from not far away.

Seeing her, Trevor walked over towards her and asked calmly, "So, what's the problem that you want to tell?"

Bowing her head slightly, Jeanne reported, "Mr. Sanderson, you need to make a decision on the disposal of the Salazar family..."

In fact, if the orphanage was going to build new facilities, they had to purchase the surrounding land.

To their surprise, the surrounding land was owned by the Salazar family.

That was the reason why the Salazar family had been making troubles for the orphanage by using the hooligans.

They wanted to have the orphanage's land!

Their big picture was to connect the lands nearby and build a shopping center in this crowded old city.

When the director refused to sell them with the low price, the orphanage's land was like a thorn in Salazars' flesh they desperately wanted to get rid of.

Now that the Salazar family had gone bankrupt, they could no longer develop their plan.

After thinking for a while, Trevor said in a low voice, "Purchase all the surrounding land at the lowest price."

It was needless to say that Trevor had no mercy on the Salazar family.

Therefore, he asked Jeanne to buy all their lands at the lowest price. He didn't want to give them any chance to turn the tables.

Adjusting her glasses, Jeanne nodded.

At the Salazar family's house, the air was filled with depression.

The huge villa was empty.

The things that were left were sealed.

Holding his head with both hands, Howe was watching the TV dejectedly.

The local news was being broadcasted on TV. The host had a serious look on his face as he announced the news about the bankruptcy of the great Salazar family.

Of course, Howe knew that their Salazar family would never be able to turn the tables again.

Loud voices could be heard from the other side of the living room. Howe's parents were quarrelling fiercely.

"Did we offend someone? What should we do now? All of us will be doomed if we can't pay off the debts!"

"But how are we going to pay all of it? We have already sold everything we can yet we still owe nearly one hundred million dollars!"

At that time, Howe suggested timidly, "Umm...Dad, I think we will be able to pay off the debts if we sell the land near the orphanage."

Howe no longer had the arrogant attitude because of the successive blows.

No matter what, Howe couldn't help but think that his family went bankrupt because he had offended Trevor.

Obviously, he didn't have the nerve to tell anyone about this.

With a frown on his face, Howe's father, Locke, sighed deeply and said, "Well, I guess that's the only way..."

In the past, the Salazar family was so ambitious that they spent nearly three hundred million dollars to buy the land.

After all, they had planned to build a shopping mall to improve their status to a higher level in Jork.

What they didn't expect was that things would turn out this way. Within a day, the great Salazar family had gone bankrupt with no warning.

Placing all his hopes on the land, Howe muttered in a low voice, "If only that piece of land is sold for three hundred million dollars, no, even two hundred million dollars, we would still have the remaining one hundred million dollars which is enough to spend for the rest of our lives!"

After all, their land was in the bustling area of the old city. If they didn't have to sell it in a hurry, they might even get four or five hundred million dollars for the land.

At that time, Locke's phone rang which attracted the attention of the whole family.

In hope of getting some money, Locke wouldn't miss any phone call right now. Therefore, he answered immediately.

However, he was shocked when he heard the words of the person from the other end of the phone.

"What? Are you telling me that you want to buy our land with fifty million dollars? This is absolutely impossible!"

Obviously, Locke couldn't accept to sell with such kind of low price. Pacing back and forth angrily, he wanted to hang up the phone.

On the other end of the phone, Jeanne was persistent.

In a cold voice, she said, "You should think it over. As long as the Sanderson family doesn't allow it, no one will dare to buy your land in Jork. So, if you don't sell it right now, you might not even have a chance in the future."

Locke could hear the obvious threat in Jeanne's words. At that time, he became so angry that he gnashed his teeth.

However, he knew for a fact that what Jeanne said was indeed true.

Therefore, Locke was afraid that they might not have a chance to sell the land in the future if they didn't sell it right now.

After hesitating for a while, Locke said with a heavy heart, "Okay, we will sell them. But I want to know the reason why the Sanderson family is so against us!"

All of the signs indicated one thing.

Their bankruptcy of the Salazar family might have something to do with the Sanderson family!

However, Locke couldn't figure out how he had offended the powerful Sanderson family.

At that time, Trevor took the phone from Jeanne and gave an indifferent answer, "Well, it's all thanks to your stupid son. He let me know how many bad things your family has done!" After saying that, Trevor hung up the phone abruptly.

When Locke heard Trevor's voice, he froze. Then, he thought about his words and his face changed dramatically. Finally, he roared in a low voice, "Howe, get over here right now!"
