

Blessed 287

Chapter 287 Interview

Trevor received a call from Jeanne not long after they parted their ways.

"Mr. Sanderson, the Salazar family has signed the contract to sell their lands. So, the project has officially started. We will hold the interview for the teachers tomorrow."

All thanks to Jeanne's excellent efficiency, the deal with the Salazar family was officially done. When Trevor heard the news about the interview, he got interested.

"Okay, arrange the interview then. I want to supervise the situation of the interview tomorrow."

The next morning, Trevor wore his usual clothes and went to the place where the interview was going to be held.

Jeanne arranged the interview in an office building in the commercial street.

In fact, this office building was the headquarters of Sanderson Profumeria owned by Evie.

As Trevor hadn't set up his own company, the interview was arranged under the name of his sister's company.

Looking at the huge signboard at the entrance, Trevor thought of something.

He thought if he should establish a company to manage his own business.

Well, since there was no need to rush, he thought of discussing about it with Jeanne first.

Thinking about it, Trevor walked into the office.

When he arrived, the hall was already filled with a lot of people.

Even though the interview was for the position of a teacher in an orphanage, the salary was quite huge.

Mostly, it was because the position was under the Sanderson family.

Therefore, a lot of people applied for the job.

Among the applicants, there were many people with outstanding education and some of them were good-looking.

Actually, Trevor came here as an interviewer.

In order to enter the meeting room, he had to bypass the crowd in the line.

Today, Trevor was wearing casual clothes and he looked very young.

The people who applied for the job thought that Trevor was here for the job too.

Therefore, his actions aroused dissatisfaction.

At that time, someone shouted, "Don't jump in the queue. Can't you see that everyone is lining up?"

Hearing this, a tall and thin young man lifted his front hair and mocked, "What a poor man! I'm sure that you won't even pass the interview. So, why don't you go home early?"

The young man was wearing a pair of gold frame glasses. Although he looked gentle, he was very arrogant.

Closing his eyes, Trevor was going to tell them his identity.

However, when he saw the man's attitude, he suddenly got another idea.

This interview was to pick a teacher for the children. In Trevor's eyes, the teacher should be patient and cultivated.

Since they were thinking of him as a candidate, he thought he should take this chance to test the job applicants.

With that thought in mind, Trevor walked to the back of the line.

In fact, he wanted to observe the temperament and personality of the people who came to look for the job.

At that time, Trevor wondered if they really had the intention of educating children. Were they just interested in the salary the Sanderson family was going to give?

Seeing the retreating figure of Trevor, the young man snorted proudly and turned to the other people around him to chat.

Although Trevor ignored the provocation, he couldn't just forget what the young man did.

When he got to the end of the line, the person in front of him was a beautiful girl with a pair of glasses. Her long hair was swept in a ponytail.

Seeing that Trevor was standing in the line, the girl whispered, "Hi, actually, you shouldn't have cut in the line. But I have to admit that his words were too harsh."

With a bitter smile, Trevor asked, "Well, it's all my fault in the first place. Are you here for the interview too?"

"Yes, I am Millie Deleon. What's your name? The people who came here today are all applying for the teacher position."

The gentle voice of the girl and her logical remarks aroused Trevor's interest.

Trevor introduced himself and asked tentatively, "Why did you apply for this position? Is it because of the high salary?"

Looking at Trevor in surprise, Millie shook her head and said, "No, why do you think so? When I heard that the orphanage is recruiting teachers, I wanted to apply for it because I think it's a very meaningful thing. I want to teach the children there and help them."

After chatting with Millie for a while, Trevor nodded his head with satisfaction.

Millie looked very gentle and patient. Judging from the way she talked, Trevor was sure that she was really fond of children.

However, their conversation was interrupted by someone's mocking voice.

"This is so funny. Who believes that being a teacher is for the sake of the children? I can't believe that we still have those hypocrites in this era."

Actually, the person who said those sarcastic words was none other than the young man with glasses.

When he saw that Trevor was looking at him with dissatisfaction, he said with disdain, "If this position isn't from the Sanderson family, I could care less about those bastards who don't even have parents!"