Chapter 137 What Is Wrong With Him

Janessa joined the company after two days of rest. The rashes were almost gone. There were just a few scratch marks on her chin. She had a pink mask on and looked fine.

As she entered the company, she was showered with greetings right from the entrance to the elevator. Some even got fruits and snacks for her.

By the time she reached the top floor, she was carrying a pile of food.

Just as the elevator door opened, she was faced with Corbin's startled expression.

"Hi Janessa, are you coming back to work or planning a vacation?" The two were familiar enough to joke around sometimes.

But they only did all this in Rayan's absence.

"All this is my reward for the excellent anniversary party I managed to pull off." It was beyond Janessa's expectation that her colleagues would suddenly become so... So enthusiastic about her.

She suddenly recalled the message she had noticed in the WeChat group.

Maybe these people thought she and Rayan were going to get back together.

She smiled helplessly. Her arms were already aching. So the moment she saw that Corbin's hands were free, she threw a few things towards him to catch.

"You can have them. Thank me later." In fact she handed most of the things to Corbin before going to her desk.

He looked sadly at the things in his hand because he hardly ate any of the fruits or the snacks. But Janessa too probably ate none of the things.

What would he do with all these things? Who would even help him?

He was clueless. On top of that, as he was about to place the things on his table first, he heard a low voice from behind.

"Corbin, aren't you aware that you can't have snacks during your work hours? No bonus for you this month. Janessa, I need you in here, right now."

Rayan's cold voice sounded like that of a ghost in the office.

Corbin was totally stunned by the ordeal he was suddenly facing. So he looked at Janessa like a helpless little puppy and hoped that she would help out in some way because all of these belonged to her. But she absolutely ignored him and followed Rayan into his office with her notebook in hand.

"Animal!" Corbin cursed in anger and carried the food into the office to leave it in an empty box. He sulked for quite a while before going back to work.

Once in the office, Janessa noticed that Rayan had pulled down all the shutters, so that nothing was visible from the outside. This confused her.

"How are you? Are you okay now? I don't want to give the impression of a cruel boss to the other employees. They should not think that they need to work even when they are really sick." Rayan leaned against his desk and looked at Janessa intently. He thought he hated her from the core. Why did he always end up rushing to her whenever something was wrong with this woman, recently?

The moment he heard that she was back to work, he immediately rushed out of his office.

He just had to see her.

"I think I have a tendency of contracting allergies easily. With the two days' worth of rest I am absolutely fine now." Janessa informed formally.

She maintained a very alienated and indifferent attitude. It was as if she did not want anyone near her.

This drove Rayan crazy.

He was worried to the point of being sick, and she completely snubbed him off? Why was she so casual about her allergy? Or she already knew who did it to her and was not bothered to delve deeper into the conspiracy?

But he still maintained his cold demeanor. He just circled the desk and sat down on his chair without making any comment.

Janessa really did not understand what exactly Rayan was trying to do! Did she make a mistake by coming back to work so soon? Was that why he seemed mad?

It was her first time seeing a boss being angry because an employee did not take a longer leave.

Was this person someone else?

Real Rayan would never say all these things.

"Well Mr. Lu if you are done, I will take my leave. I did not come to work for two days, so a lot has piled up." Janessa politely nodded her head and tried to get out of the office.

She knew she had to deal with a lot of backlogged work from the last two days. Especially she didn't know what happened to the anniversary party after she was sent to the hospital.

If things messed up by any means, she would be the one to answer.

Even though she found Rayan's behavior way out of normal, she did not think it had anything to do with her specifically.

She was just interested to get her work done at the moment.

Janessa started to walk out without thinking twice. Just as she was about to turn the knob of the door the voice from behind stopped her.

Actually, she stopped hearing the voice because she was so surprised.

"Don't you want to know how you got the allergy?"

"Sorry? I don't get you."

Janessa turned to look at him in complete shock. 'What is he implying?

Does this mean that all this was a conspiracy and not an accident?'

"Aren't you aware that very few people know that you are allergic to taros? I read through the menu and none of the dishes included that thing. Then, how come you got the allergy? Did it not strike to you?"

Even though he did not express much verbally, it was clear that he was really annoyed because Janessa did not show any interest to know what happened.

However, she did not think much of it simply because she thought that probably there were taros back in the kitchen the same night they had the party, and the chefs made a mistake when they handle the food. 'Was there anything else to this whole episode?'

"Did you find something out?"

She thought maybe he knew something about the whole incident already. Otherwise, why would he even bring up the discussion without proper evidence?

"You tell me. What do you think?" Rayan asked her back instead of replying.

Janessa now became thoughtful. She remembered that right from the beginning of the event till she passed out, she gave strict instructions to all the departments to carry out their work flawlessly.

Elaina had laid out all the details carefully. Then, how did such an accident occur?

On top of that, she was so busy that she did not have time or an opportunity to eat at all. She however, did drink water while working.

'Drinks?'

That was when Janessa thought of a person. 'Could it be her?'

Rayan was closely looking at her and observing the expressions. When he noticed the rigidity on her face, he knew that she had figured it out.

"I want you to call all the managers to the meeting room immediately." Rayan was silent all this time. Once he gave his orders, he went back to check his documents.

Although he did not say anything explicitly, she knew he would get to the root of the incident and solve it in front of all the managers so that people knew the consequences of such actions.

She thought that she could forgive the little tricks some people played before, but she now had a taste of her blind overindulgence of these people.

'But who told her about my allergy?

I think only the HR department and the administration department were aware of it because they had my personal information...'

Janessa was really confused at this point. 'Am I making a wrong assumption?'
