

Chapter 408 Want A Baby

Rosie was shocked. Originally, she had no interest in this, but when she found out that Paul and Katelyn were heading out to visit the Oliver family, the news suddenly piqued her interest. "Mom, did you just say the Oliver family?"

"Do you know them? Are you familiar with the Oliver Group?"

Rosie's heart beat fiercely in her chest. "Are you talking about that famous international group?"

Katelyn nodded her head.

Rosie's heart sped up even faster. She asked, "They are friends of ours?"

"Yes. We have been friends for generations. When Kane was still a child, we lived in the very same villa district. Though we moved away, we still remained friends."

'The Oliver family!' Rosie shook from head to toe out of excitement. She always knew the Evans family, which was involved in the wood business, was rich and had a strong financial basis, but little did she expect that they had been friends with the Oliver family.

Even though Ryan had attended her wedding, she thought he had come only out of politeness because he and Kane were business partners.

'I didn't expect the two families are friends. This means...'

Rosie's excitement was very noticeable at that point. "Why am I finding out about this only now?"

Katelyn gave her an awkward smile.

They used to be next-door neighbors with the Oliver family. People in the villa district were not only familiar with them but also the Johnson family who lived nearby. Although the love affair between Kane and Roger was kept under wraps, it was common knowledge among the families. They took precautions in case someone made a slip of the tongue that Kane and Roger had been in a relationship in front of Rosie. That was the reason why they never took her there.

"Ahem!" Katelyn cleared her throat. "Well, Kane's work has always kept him rather busy, so Paul and I usually pay our old neighbors a visit. But now we are growing old. You have to keep up with these family ties in the future. So would you like to come with us?"

"Yes, yes. But just a moment. I'm heading upstairs first to change my clothes."

"Okay. Paul and I will be downstairs waiting for you."

Rosie rushed up the stairs.

Paul and Katelyn sat side by side on the sofa in the living room, waiting for Rosie. Paul had a frown on his face as he asked, "Why did you suddenly make the decision to take her there out of the blue?"

Katelyn let out a long sigh. "I feel guilty. It's almost been five years since Kane and Rosie got married. Kane has treated her very coldly. This makes me feel very bad for her."

Hearing her words, Paul became quiet.

"My guilt is eating me up. I want to do something to make it up to her."

"Didn't you just purchase a house for her parents?"

Katelyn could not help but sigh again. "Yes. But I don't think that is enough. I hope that they become a happy couple, and then maybe Rosie will get pregnant with Kane's child. In our old age, a grandchild is just what we need. I've already made up my mind. After Rosie gives birth to Kane's child, I'll give her the villa in Ensfield as a present."

Paul didn't voice any objections. "As long as you think that's a good idea."

"Paul, I've been feeling a little uneasy."

"Why?"

Katelyn looked around and found that they were alone. Then, she whispered in her husband's ear, "Is Kane being so cold to Rosie because he still has feelings for—"

"Stop with your nonsense!" Paul interrupted Katelyn sternly. "That happened so many years ago. They were just two confused boys at the time. Ten years have passed since then, and Kane is now married. Don't bring this up anymore!"

Katelyn had a bitter smile on her face. She hoped that she was just overthinking things.

Rosie changed out of her clothes and thought a new dress would better fit the occasion. She donned a bright red dress, black leggings, black boots, and a pure black overcoat.

"Rosie, the weather is cold outside. You may catch a cold." Katelyn pointed to the outside. "It's currently snowing outside. Why don't you put on a down jacket? It will keep you warmer."

"That's alright." Rosie walked over to her with a smile and held Katelyn by the arm. "I'm still young and can take the cold!"

Katelyn was clearly amused. "I've been hearing you young people brag about this a lot. But you really should consider your health first."

'She's being such an annoyance! Can she just shut up?' Rosie disliked hearing a long lecture about something she had already made up her mind over. If it wasn't because they might offer some help with matters between her and Kane, she wouldn't let these two old people anywhere near her affairs.

Even though she was feeling displeased, Rosie still had a smile on her face and said, "It's okay. I don't feel cold at all."

Hearing her words, there was little Katelyn could do about this. "Then let's get going."

"Let's head out."

Once they emerged from the villa, the driver hurried to come over with a big umbrella to protect them from the falling snow. But with the three of them, it was not possible for the driver to hold the umbrella for all of them.

"Here, let me." Rosie grabbed hold of the umbrella and used it to cover Paul's and Katelyn's heads.

Katelyn took hold of her hand into hers and complimented her. "Thank you so much, Rosie. You are a godsend. Kane is not accustomed to expressing what he is feeling. I'm sure if you give him more time, he will fall in love with you eventually."

Rosie smiled but did not say a word. "What the hell! Our marriage has lasted for nearly five years. Isn't that enough time for him to warm up to me?"

Rosie walked down the path with the two of them, trying to coax them. "I know that marriages break apart and people divorce every day and that that is nothing unusual. You can call me conservative, but it is always been a belief of mine that once I got married, it would last forever. Kane's treatment of me has always been a little cold. Even though this has left me a little disappointed at times, this is something that I have grown used to."

Katelyn felt relieved.

"I'm thinking about having a baby. I can take care of the baby at home after it is born. Then I will have nothing to complain about and my life won't be so boring. Besides, I'm not as young as I was before. I've done my research online and experts say that the best age for women to have children is twenty-six. If we wait for a few years, the risk of having children will be higher."

Katelyn nodded her head. "I completely agree! It's about time you have a baby. Once a man turns into a father, he will show more responsibility as a man."

When this reached her ears, Rosie had a bitter smile on her face.

"What's the matter?" Katelyn asked.

Rosie glanced over at Paul and said to Katelyn in a whisper, "I want to have a baby. But that is not something I can do alone."

"Don't worry about it. I'll give Kane a call later and have him come home tonight! If he doesn't return right away, Paul and I will make our way to the company to drag him back."

"Thank you so much!" Rosie's eyes brightened upon finding out that things were going her way for once.

"Paul and I won't move out until you get pregnant."

"Alright!"

