

Chapter 265 How Can I Trust You

Seeing that Sabrina was silent, Galilea smiled complacently.

If Sabrina were to confront Tyrone and he were to reveal her photo and identity, it would result in a devastating blow to her self-esteem, leaving her feeling embarrassed and unable to face Tyrone with any sense of dignity.

Galilea asked, "Don't you get it? Tyrone loves me! If you hadn't pestered Tyrone and taken him from me, Cesar wouldn't have died. You're a jinx!"

"Shut up!" Sabrina's face paled and her eyes turned red. "Do you think that you could deceive me? Regardless of what happened between me and Tyrone, you caused Grandpa's death. Don't even think about trying to shift the blame onto me."

Those were the exact words Evelyn had employed, and Sabrina wouldn't fall for the deception.

She was not a jinx!

Absolutely not!

"I won't shut up!" Galilea grinned cynically. "You're the black sheep here! Cesar died because of you. You're just a bitch! No matter how much you chase after Tyrone, he'll never love you!"

She scoffed and walked off.

Watching Galilea leave, Sabrina stood her ground and sneered.

When Sabrina returned to the room, she saw some of her favorite dishes laid out.

Tyrone glanced up. "You're back?"

"Yes," Sabrina replied, sitting down and locking eyes with him. "Tyrone?"

"What is it?" Tyrone asked, detecting her somber demeanor. "What's the matter?"

"I just ran into Galilea. She was with Lee."

"She brought it upon herself. She deserves it," Tyrone remarked firmly.

"But I recall you mentioning that you had her admitted to Third Hospital. How did she get released?" Sabrina lifted her head, her gaze on Tyrone cold and steady.

Aware of Cesar's rapidly deteriorating condition, Sabrina mentally prepared herself for the inevitable day he would pass away.

But she had hoped that Cesar would have no regrets before dying.

Galilea should not have needlessly provoked Cesar.

Even though Cesar had been a legend businessman, Galilea ultimately shattered him and contributed to his demise. Sabrina would never forgive her for that.

Tyrone felt a moment of panic, fearful of what Galilea might have divulged. "What did she tell you?"

Did Galilea reveal her identity and share the photo?

"I'm asking you!" Sabrina suddenly raised her voice and glared at Tyrone. "That's your grandfather! Are you so in love with Galilea that you forgive her for her role in his death?"

"Sabrina, I've told you, I don't have feelings for Galilea!"

"You're still lying to me!" Sabrina stared at him icily.

In Sabrina's eyes, despite his fondness for Galilea, the fact that she was responsible for his grandfather's death was a burden he couldn't shake off. While he chose not to remain with Galilea, he still harbored a reluctance to see her face any consequences for her actions.

If he had known that Galilea had sex with Lee to get a role, he might have been soft-hearted and given her some support.

Sabrina didn't expect that Tyrone would still keep the truth from her about his feelings for Galilea, especially since they had divorced for such a long time.

She almost believed what he said in the ward that day.

Fortunately, Sabrina was unaffected by his words, or else she would have been deemed the most gullible person on the planet.

"No, I'm not," Tyrone denied.

"Then tell me why you let her out."

Tyrone gazed at Sabrina. He opened his mouth to speak but lowered his head in silence.

Revealing her true identity or that she had given birth to a child was out of the question for Tyrone.

Her expression twisted into a sneer. "Tell me!"

"Sabrina, you have to trust me," Tyrone pleaded.

"How can I trust you?" she retorted.

"Uncle, Auntie, can you please stop arguing?" Jennie interjected in a hushed tone.

Sabrina took a deep breath to calm herself down. Then she smiled at Jennie. "I'm sorry. We'll stop arguing."

When she ran into Galilea, she lost her head and got into a heated argument with Tyrone in front of Jennie. She realized it was a mistake.

Tyrone didn't say anything more.

However, the atmosphere at the table became tense.

Following their meal, the trio exited the restaurant together.

Galilea felt ill after consuming a considerable amount of alcohol. She stepped outside for some fresh air and noticed the three leaving.

Tyrone and Sabrina flanked Jennie, each holding one of her hands, creating the image of a close family.

Tyrone said to Sabrina softly, "I'll drive you back with Jennie."

Galilea was stunned and consumed with envy. She stared until the three of them turned the corner and disappeared.

Why was Tyrone still with Sabrina?

Didn't he already know the kind of person Sabrina was?

Did he like her so much that he overlooked the fact that she had a child?

Galilea thought Tyrone denied his feelings for Sabrina during his last encounter with her to deceive her into giving him all the photos she possessed.

Tyrone was very good at deceiving!

Galilea clenched her fists so tightly that her nails dug into her flesh. She was filled with anger and frustration, boiling inside her.

Why?

Why was she banned from continuing her acting career and had to resort to pleasing a wretched old man just to get a chance to appear on a variety show? Sabrina, however, seemed to have a magical hold over Tyrone, effortlessly winning his affection even when she was unfaithful.

It wasn't fair. Galilea couldn't accept it.

On their way back home, Sabrina remained distant from Tyrone.

When the car pulled up at the apartment, Sabrina stepped out with Jennie. She gave Tyrone a cold, indifferent glance and said, "We're home. You can leave now."

Tyrone quickly caught her hand. He gazed at her with a pained expression. "Sabrina, I didn't lie to you. I had my reasons why I..."

"What reasons?" Sabrina asked, turning her head to face him.

Tyrone's lips tightened, and he averted his gaze. "I can't tell you right now."

"Tell me what's going on, and then I'll believe you."

Sabrina's words hung in the air, a final chance for Tyrone to come clean. However, Tyrone remained silent. He couldn't tell her. It would devastate her. Sabrina's voice was patient but firm as she asked again, "I'm willing to give you a chance to explain. But if you don't say anything, I'll have no choice but to assume that you're still lying to me and that your heart still belongs to Galilea."

His silence confirmed Sabrina's lingering suspicion—that Tyrone was still in love with Galilea.

If that were true, she might never be with Tyrone again.

With an aching heart filled with regret, Tyrone closed his eyes and clenched his fists, trying to hold back the flood of emotions that threatened to overwhelm him.

Tyrone's silence only added to Sabrina's frustration. After waiting for a while, she finally lost her patience. She looked at Jennie and said, "Let's go, Jennie."

Jennie looked back at Tyrone as Sabrina briskly led her to the apartment.

Tyrone's eyes were deep pools of emotion as he slowly opened them and gazed at Sabrina's retreating figure. All he wanted was to protect her and shield her from the pain and heartache he knew would come with the truth.

He raised his hand slowly and waved bye to Jennie.

The little girl then turned her head and walked away with Sabrina.

While they rode the elevator up to the apartment, Sabrina stared blankly at the number on the small screen.

She couldn't understand why Tyrone was keeping something from her.

Was it because of his love for Galilea?

Perhaps he was trying to fool her again, and there were no reasons except that he loved Galilea.

She didn't want to dwell on Tyrone's mysterious behavior any longer.

"Auntie, we're here." Jennie's sweet voice brought her back to reality.

Sabrina took a deep breath and came to her senses. It was time to focus on the present.

After returning to the apartment, Sabrina contacted a previous client, someone she had collaborated with. However, she decided not to bring up the topic of her father. Instead, she informed them that an escaped prisoner was on the loose in Mallowsnow.

The individual was currently out of the country and couldn't provide much assistance, but he did suggest a person to Sabrina. He was a gangster member and had connections in the underworld. His name was Murray Scott.

Sabrina promptly made a call to Murray.

Understanding Sabrina's intentions, Murray demanded one hundred thousand as an initial payment and an additional two hundred thousand upon completing the task.

Sabrina negotiated with him and settled on fifty thousand as an initial payment.

This way, even if Murray didn't fulfill the task, she would lose fifty thousand at most.

Sabrina had no prior experience with Murray and didn't know how reliable he would be. Additionally, the contract for this illegal task would be invalid. Despite the significant risk of being deceived, Sabrina felt compelled to proceed due to her lack of alternatives.

She had to try her best to minimize the loss.
