Chapter 661

After leaving the company, Sadie immediately rushed back home.

She looked at the photos she had backed up, her eyes filled with satisfaction.

She had already instructed her assistant to contact the entertainment news reporters.

With these photos in hand, she could easily frame Harriet with a scandalous reputation overnight.

Thinking that, she inquired about the current situation from her assistant at once.

The assistant made the call. They had already arranged for the news to be released.

All articles were edited and ready for her review.

"No need to show me. The more sensational, the better!"

She instructed, "Keep it confidential. No one must know it was me."

After these brief instructions, the call was disconnected.

The news spread rapidly, with Sadie even hiring online influencers to stir up the controversy.

Within an hour, photos of Harriet and Delbert had become explosive news.

Negative public opinion quickly shifted towards Harriet, accusing her of betraying her husband and engaging in an affair with her assistant in Imperium. Women who had previously admired Delbert now turned against Harriet upon learning of her alleged misconduct.

They even went to great lengths to find her residence and spread even bigger lies.

Public opinion didn't require any cost.

A few words were enough to strip a person of their innocence.

The scandal erupted swiftly, catching Harriet and Delbert unaware as they were immersed in their own blissful world.

The next morning, as they opened the door to leave for work, they were met with a crowd of angry people demanding an apology from Harriet.

"Harriet, you deceitful woman, you finally show your face! We've been waiting here for you!

"I can't believe you're actually cohabitating with your assistant behind Mr. Delbert's back. That's really shameless!"

The lead woman shouted, accusing Harriet of infidelity with her assistant while being married to Delbert.

Upon hearing that, Harriet was stunned.

Could it be that they had mistaken her for someone else?

She had never done anything to betray Delbert.

"Is there a misunderstanding? This's my husband. We have a good relationship. I've never..."

"Harriet, you're a liar. The evidence is clear. How dare you lie! You were publicly intimate with your assistant in the company. There is evidence online. Do you still want to argue?" Before Harriet could respond, she was interrupted.

She finally realized that she had been set up.

Recalling Sadie's harsh words from the day before, she was certain Sadie was behind it all.

Delbert and Harriet exchanged a glance, falling into silence as people raised their phones to record.

Some even livestreamed the confrontation, demanding Harriet apologize publicly and admit her wrongdoing.

"If you apologize in front of everyone today, leave Delbert, and run off with your assistant, we'll let this go!" they demanded.

"You are not worthy of Mr. Delbert! Hiding behind this facade, you're actually a fickle woman at heart!"

The insults grew harsher, prompting Delbert to intervene.

"Shut up!" he roared, protecting Harriet and leading her back inside.

As he turned around, Delbert's gaze swept through the crowd and happened to catch a glimpse of a very familiar figure in the corner.

The person wore a hat and sunglasses, covering up well, but couldn't escape Delbert's eyes.

It was Sadie, the real manipulator behind the scenes of public opinion!

Chapter 662

Delbert gritted his teeth and immediately dispatched security guards to remove the troublemakers causing a scene for money. Unable to tolerate Sadie's continuous harassment of Harriet, Delbert was about to confront her, but suddenly he received a call from her.

Not wanting Harriet to suffer further harm, Delbert reluctantly backed down.

He closed himself in the study before answering her call.

"Sadie, do you want to die? I can make it happen!"

Delbert coldly threatened before Sadie could say anything.

Shrugging nonchalantly, Sadie didn't directly answer his question.

"I've booked a hotel, Delbert. I'm inviting you for dinner tonight. I'll send you the location."

Although her invitation seemed irresistible, Delbert had no patience to entertain her and bluntly stated, "I won't give you another chance, Sadie. This time, you'll have to make amends to Harriet."

Knowing that Delbert wouldn't agree to meet her, Sadie held a trump card and wasn't afraid of his refusal.

"Delbert, if you don't come, it would be a shame. I happen to have information about your brother. But it seems I can't tell you in person. Forget it then."

Once Delbert heard the words "your brother," his pupils suddenly contracted.

His own brother had been missing for years. How could Sadie possibly know about him?

After all these years of searching, he hadn't found his brother who had gone missing after falling into water due to his mistake.

"Don't you want to see your brother?"

Since childhood, his brother had disappeared into the river because of him, and his parents had never treated him well since then.

It had been so many years since that accident, but it still lingered like a thorn in Delbert's heart.

Regardless of whether Sadie was using this to deceive him or not, he had to go on this journey today.

If his brother could really be found, he couldn't miss this opportunity.

If his brother could be found, perhaps his mother wouldn't hate him so much anymore?

After some hesitation, Delbert finally agreed.

"Fine, I promise you, we'll meet later."

"OK, I'll wait for you!"

Sadie sneered and hung up the phone.

Reading the popular search terms about Harriet, Sadie couldn't help but snort.

She had lost patience by now.

Her feelings for Delbert were no less than Harriet's, and she believed she was more than suitable for Delbert in terms of looks, background, and abilities. But what was it about Harriet that she couldn't measure up to?

She had given her heart to Delbert, but he never even glanced at her.

After all these years, Delbert and Harriet had gotten married and seemed even happier.

But how about her?

She was always an outsider.

She refused to continue like this.

If she couldn't have Delbert, then Harriet shouldn't either!

Anything Sadie didn't want, she would ruin it and wouldn't let anyone else have it.

Meanwhile, in the villa.

Delbert embraced Harriet, kissed her forehead, and comforted her softly.

"It's alright, Harriet. I've taken care of everything. Just rest at home and don't worry, alright?"

Harriet nodded and sighed deeply.

"Delbert, I'm feeling tired. Can you take me upstairs to rest?"

Delbert gently carried Harriet up and laid her on the bed, then covered her with a blanket.

He stayed by her side until he heard her breathing evenly, then quietly closed the door and immediately rushed out to meet Sadie.

Chapter 663

Driving away quickly, Delbert furrowed his brows deeply.

He was consumed with thoughts about his missing brother and pondered numerous possibilities.

But what intrigued him the most was why Sadie knew the whereabouts of his long-lost brother.

He had to clarify the cause and effect of the situation today.

If she dared to deceive him?

He would never let her get away with it!

With that thought in mind, he stepped on the gas pedal, increasing the speed of his car.

However, at a corner ahead, several black cars suddenly appeared and headed straight towards Delbert.

With quick reflexes, Delbert managed to avoid a collision by turning the direction of his car in time.

Initially thinking the other party was drunk, upon closer observation, Delbert realized they were clearly after him. When the plan foiled, the black cars restarted and aggressively approached Delbert's car.

Realizing the danger, Delbert immediately accelerated and tried to escape.

Despite his efforts, the cars behind him kept chasing relentlessly.

Delbert had no choice but to accelerate even more.

Soon enough, they surrounded Delbert's car from all sides.

Facing the imminent danger, Delbert was about to accelerate again, but a car beside him suddenly collided with his. Delbert's own car was speeding on the highway.

Now, with such an impact, it was difficult to adjust the direction for a moment, and it crashed through the fence. With a loud "bang"!

The car instantly fell into the sea, disappearing in an instant.

Those black sedans quickly left the scene once their goal was achieved.

The next morning, Harriet woke up but couldn't find Delbert anywhere.

"Delbert!"

Panicked, she searched the house but found no trace of him.

She called but no one answered.

Remembering Delbert's troubled expression from the day before, Harriet realized something was wrong.

Just then, there was a frantic knock on the door, and she opened it to find Ben standing there.

Ben, out of breath, leaned against the door and said anxiously, "Miss Harriet, something's wrong. Mr. Delbert has gone missing since yesterday and there's been no news." Upon hearing Ben's words, Harriet immediately froze, her pupils shrinking abruptly.

Her body staggered back a few steps.

"What happened?"

How could Delbert suddenly disappear out of the blue?

Ben quickly took out his phone and showed Harriet the text message Delbert had sent him last night.

Delbert specifically instructed Ben to take good care of Harriet.

Harriet suddenly came to her senses.

Something must have happened yesterday, so after Delbert had comforted her to sleep, he immediately left the villa.

The two of them took turns calling, but no one could reach Delbert.

Harriet was extremely anxious and could only let Ben take her to Levi's villa.

Now only Levi could help her find Delbert.

Seeing her sister in such a hurry, Levi asked at once, "Yvonne, what's wrong?"

After calming her emotions, he inquired about the situation.

It turned out that Delbert had gone missing.

This wasn't like the man they knew.

After listening, Levi patted Harriet's shoulder and immediately reassured her.

"Don't worry, Yvonne, I'll send people out to find Delbert. Don't be too anxious. He'll definitely be fine. That brat is always very lucky."

Chapter 664

Even though Delbert was several years older than him, Levi felt uncomfortable looking at that face that bore some resemblance to his own. That was why he always referred to him as "that brat."

But now that Delbert was missing, it was unsettling for Yvonne, so he had to help find him.

"Thank you, Levi. I appreciate your help in finding Delbert."

Harriet nodded anxiously, sitting on the sofa looking extremely uneasy.

Levi immediately took out his phone and called his other brothers, instructing them to use their connections and resources to search for Delbert.

Even if they had to turn the whole city upside down, they must find Delbert.

Since it wasn't yet time to file a missing person report, Harriet had to accompany Levi to utilize their resources in the search for Delbert.

During the search, Harriet's heart beat faster and faster.

Without news of Delbert, every moment felt like an eternity.

In the afternoon, Arthur finally had some news.

He hurriedly came to the villa and told Harriet, "Yvonne, there's news about Delbert. Last night, he was seen on a secluded road near the sea in Imperium. "The road is rarely used as a new road has been constructed. There are no surveillance cameras."

This news shocked Harriet.

She feared that it might be a trap set up by someone to harm Delbert.

"Arthur, I need to go there and have a look!"

Harriet stood up immediately.

She couldn't wait any longer and had to go to that road right away.

Upon receiving the message sent by Arthur, Harriet's other brothers gathered as well.

They accompanied Harriet to the road without surveillance where they saw the fence destroyed by a car collision.

Harriet covered her mouth in shock and couldn't help but gasp.

She rushed down the car and followed the broken fence all the way down to the sea.

She frantically searched around but found nothing until she saw a pillow thrown out of the car on the shore.

She recognized that pillow.

It was specially bought by Delbert for her comfort in the car!

The car had overturned, causing items inside to spill out.

The changing tides had washed away the traces on the beach, making it difficult to determine immediately.

Tears welled up in Harriet's eyes as she tightly hugged the pillow, crying uncontrollably.

She was terrified that Delbert might have fallen into the sea.

How could they find him in the vast ocean?

Seeing that, Levi gave a signal, and his men quickly began salvaging.

However, even they couldn't be sure if Delbert's car was still nearby.

With the changing tides, the car could have been carried elsewhere.

If they couldn't salvage it, what would they do then?

Everyone was deeply concerned, especially Harriet.

Her eyes were fixed on the sea.

She refused to believe that anything bad had happened to Delbert but was also terrified at the thought.

As time passed by, the manpower brought by the Bass brothers finally salvaged a car from the sea.

It was a silver-gray car.

Harriet's pupils suddenly shrank.

Although there was no license plate, it was unmistakably Delbert's favorite car.

She recognized it at a glance!

Chapter 665

The henchmen of the Bass brothers moved the wreckage of the car to the shore.

The car windows and windshield were smashed to pieces, and the vehicle was severely deformed.

If it were someone else, it would be hard to determine whose car it was at first sight.

However, Harriet recognized it at a glance and ran forward frantically.

"This's Delbert's car. It must be. I can tell it's his!"

"Yvonne, calm down a bit. Things may not be as bad as they seem!"

Arthur and Levi quickly stopped her to prevent her from getting hurt.

What if Delbert's body was really inside the car?

Levi gave a signal.

His people hurriedly approached, immediately trying to remove the deformed car door.

But as they reached the windshield, everyone's faces quickly darkened.

They hesitated and glanced at Harriet, biting their tongues, unable to say a word.

The person in charge of the salvage slowly approached Bass brothers and Harriet.

Harriet, with tears in her eyes and extremely emotional, looked at him.

"Miss Harriet, there is a body in the car..."

"A body?" Harriet kept murmuring these two words, finding it hard to believe.

The air was filled with an unpleasant smell, and Harriet felt like she was suffocating as she looked at the gruesome scene.

An uncomfortable feeling spread in her heart, making it hard for her to breathe.

A body?

Whose body could it be?

She had never imagined such a thing happening.

Harriet could barely stand on her feet, almost stumbling, but Arthur and Levi were there to support her.

She took a deep breath, her right eyelid twitching incessantly.

She had a terrible premonition.

Arthur had already dialed 911, and the police quickly arrived, cordoning off the scene with caution tape.

A group of onlookers gathered by the roadside, and the police calmly dispersed the crowd.

"Move back. Everyone, move back!"

Harriet stepped back but kept staring ahead, breathing lightly.

In her mind, she kept repeating that the body couldn't be Delbert's.

It just couldn't be!

At this moment, a forensic doctor in a white coat stepped forward to examine the body, and Harriet felt the tension in her heart increasing.

After a while, the forensic doctor stood up, removed his blood-stained gloves, and said to them, "After preliminary assessment, the person suffered severe head injuries from a significant impact in the car and then drowned in the water."

Once Harriet heard that, her head buzzed with disbelief.

But deep inside, she still had a voice denying it.

"Who's this person? Can you identify it?"

Her voice was trembling.

"Further examination is needed at the identification center."

The forensic doctor replied calmly.

Harriet suddenly couldn't control her emotions, "I want you to tell me now who this body is right now!"

Levi sensed her unusually agitated state and quickly reassured her, "Alright, Yvonne, calm down first. This body may not necessarily be Delbert."

He then turned to the forensic doctor, "Thank you."

"It's okay."

Subsequently, the police carried the body to the identification center, and the onlookers gradually dispersed.

Levi and others drove Harriet to the identification center to check the results.

Harriet still felt dazed and her heart ached.

Chapter 666

No!

That body couldn't be Delbert!

Harriet waited quietly in the examination room, feeling unbearable pain and anxiety.

After half an hour, the forensic doctor came out and said, "Through examination, we can confirm that the deceased is Mr. Delbert."

That sentence was like a bolt from the blue, causing Harriet's head to ache terribly.

"It's impossible! Absolutely impossible! I don't believe it. Delbert can't be dead!"

Harriet couldn't accept this result and broke down into tears.

The painful feeling grew stronger.

She felt her brain going blank as tears flowed uncontrollably.

"Delbert promised to be with me forever. We were just together for such a short time. How could he abandon me like this? It's impossible! I don't believe it!"

At this moment, she was on the verge of collapsing and fainted directly.

"Yvonne, Yvonne!"

Her brothers were shocked and quickly supported her.

"Doctor! Is there a doctor? Come quickly. My sister has fainted!"

Several nurses rushed over and immediately helped Harriet up and away.

The Bass brothers followed closely behind, extremely nervous.

As the night grew late, the hospital fell silent, devoid of any sound.

Meanwhile, in a lavishly decorated private apartment, Sadie sat on a large pristine bed, wearing a satin nightgown, her long hair cascading down, looking enchanting.

In front of her lay a man, his breath already weak, with many bandaged areas on his body.

That man was Delbert.

When Sadie gazed at the unconscious Delbert, a look of infatuation appeared on her face.

A meaningful smile slowly crept up on her lips.

She stared blankly at his handsome face, her eyes revealing a hint of unattainable greed.

Her gaze swept over Delbert's exquisite and handsome face inch by inch, the smile on her lips deepening, her voice alluring, "Delbert, look, you're still lying next to me, aren't you? I am the ultimate winner." After saying that, she smiled foolishly, as if her obsession had deepened.

The TV was playing noisy news in the background, and Sadie turned up the volume to hear the report.

"At 2:15 this afternoon at location xx, a major accident occurred. An adult male died after falling into the lake by car. Upon confirmation, the man was a male assistant to Ms. Harriet."

Listening to these brutal reports, Sadie sneered.

Her expression turned sinister between her brows, and the smile on her lips grew more pronounced.

She reached over and gently covered Delbert with a thin blanket.

No one would know that she orchestrated that car accident.

Originally, she had everything planned out, and it should have gone smoothly according to her arrangements.

However, as things progressed, she became increasingly uneasy and regretful.

She thought of Delbert's bloody appearance, which filled her with fear.

In that moment, all thoughts of destroying Delbert and preventing Harriet from getting him were dispelled.

She rushed to the highway to stop everything from happening and save Delbert.

By that time, the car accident had already occurred. It seemed as if it was irreversible.

She was hit heavily while searching for Delbert, wanting to see him alive or see his body. Luckily, when she found Delbert in the wrecked car, he still had a faint pulse.

It wasn't too late.

Chapter 667

Sadie felt extremely fortunate and quickly brought Delbert back home to receive the best medical care.

Fortunately, he was out of danger.

Sadie breathed a long sigh of relief.

After that, another evil thought crept into her mind to imprison Delbert so he would always be by her side and never see Harriet again.

Perhaps over time, he would fall in love with her.

There was a possibility.

Sadie sighed deeply at this thought.

Originally, this step wasn't part of her plan, but her desires were driving her madly, leading her to where she was today.

She didn't regret it.

Looking at Delbert peacefully sleeping on the bed, she smiled faintly.

As for the body salvaged by the Bass brothers, it was a fake body arranged by Sadie when she brought Delbert back.

She changed the clothes and disfigured the face of the body to match Delbert's appearance.

She had gone this far and had to cover up everything meticulously.

She even bribed the forensic doctor to conduct a false examination promptly.

Luckily, everything went smoothly.

Even if it was discovered one day, she wouldn't regret it as long as Delbert was by her side.

Sadie adjusted the blanket covering Delbert and leaned close to his ear, then said softly, "Delbert, how could I bear to let you die like this? Don't worry, you'll always be by my side in the future. We'll be together forever!"

Her eyes were filled with paranoia, her possessiveness towards Delbert exceeding imagination.

Even she didn't expect herself to reach this level of possessing Delbert.

And she had him by her side right now.

At this moment, Delbert slowly regained consciousness.

Rubbing his throbbing head in pain, he looked around in confusion.

"Where... where am I?"

Sadie's lips curved into a smile as she moved closer to him without saying a word.

Delbert's gaze shifted back to her face with utter confusion.

"Who are you again?"

Upon hearing that, Sadie was momentarily stunned.

What was going on?

Could it be that Delbert... had lost his memories?

Delbert frowned and continued with a puzzled expression, "Who am I? Why can't I remember anything? Ah! My head hurts!"

Rubbing his temples in pain, he looked around with extreme emptiness in his eyes.

"Where exactly am I?"

He stood up in confusion and focused his gaze on Sadie before asking again.

Surprised, Sadie quickly realized the situation and felt delighted.

Without waiting for him to assess the situation further, she hurriedly spoke up, "This's our home. I'm your fiancée, Sadie. Your name is Delbert Jackson. You were being chased by enemies before which led to your amnesia.

"Fortunately, I managed to save you."

Saying that, Sadie looked upset and pitied him deeply.

She took a step forward to approach Delbert but he instinctively took two steps back, staring at her with hesitation.

"Is that so?"

"Do you... not believe me?"

Sadie's breath tightened as she feared he might remember something, so she nervously watched for any changes in Delbert's expression.

After staring at him for a while and seeing him still confused, she suppressed her anxiety and continued, "I didn't lie to you. You really are my fiancé. If you don't believe me, why would I bring you here? "This's my house. If you don't trust me, I can show you your identification or something similar, but you'll have to wait a few days."

"Why?" Delbert asked.

Chapter 668

Upon hearing that, Sadie became anxious.

"What else could it be? You were in danger. Your belongings were destroyed. Now you have to start over. Doesn't it take time to do all these things? Am I supposed to conjure them up for you now?" Sadie frowned slightly. Although she wanted Delbert, looking at the foolish man in front of her, she felt inexplicably annoyed.

In reality, she still preferred the cold and rational Delbert, not this man who couldn't remember anything.

She also felt guilty, fearing that he might remember something.

Delbert squinted slightly, intending to say something, but Sadie impatiently took out a jewel pendant from the side and handed it to him.

"Delbert, don't you recognize this? This's the token of love you gave me when we were kids."

This jewel pendant was the token of love that Delbert gave to Harriet when they were young, but Sadie stole it.

Now it could come in handy.

As soon as it appeared, Delbert's eyes widened, and he involuntarily shouted, "Yvonne!"

Before Sadie could say anything else, he immediately embraced her, murmuring "Yvonne" repeatedly.

Sadie was stunned.

She didn't expect that even with amnesia, Delbert still remembered Harriet.

The jewel pendant she brought out was the token of love he had given to Harriet years ago.

She gritted her teeth. Although she received the embrace she had longed for, she felt extremely restless at that moment.

Her brow furrowed deeply, especially when she heard him repeatedly calling Harriet's nickname.

She felt like clawing her nails into his flesh.

However, she refrained from doing so because she knew that her hatred was still directed towards Harriet.

"Delbert, I didn't expect you to remember me even with amnesia!"

Sadie forced a smile, emphasizing the last few words.

"Of course, I remember you now. You're my love, Yvonne."

Delbert gently released Sadie and smiled warmly at her.

At the moment his smile appeared, Sadie was once again stunned.

The hatred that had been festering in her heart vanished in an instant.

She stared at his upturned lips, completely captivated by his smile. "Delbert, can you hug me again? I really like your tenderness!"

Sadie's heart trembled continuously.

Delbert used to be unwelcoming to strangers but showed warmth only in front of Harriet.

However, with her, he was either indifferent or filled with disgust.

But now things were different. He treated her like he treated Harriet.

Regardless of whether his amnesia was real or feigned, she wanted him to stay by her side.

His smile was too dazzling, causing her to be lost in it.

She completely forgot what she ought to do.

"Sure!"

Delbert agreed without hesitation and immediately hugged her.

However, as his face turned away in an instant, his gentle eyes turned sharp, as if the previous tenderness was a prelude to his brutality.

Sadie, although convinced that Delbert had amnesia, still paid close attention to him.

"Delbert, your room is ahead. You shouldn't go out recently. If you must go out, take my people with you.

"There are too many enemies outside. Another accident might happen. Besides, you just survived a life-threatening situation. Your body hasn't fully recovered. Going out frequently could be risky. It would be more reassuring if you have people with you.

"You are so considerate. You wouldn't want to make me worry, right?"

Sadie squinted, smiling playfully at him, observing the ever-changing expressions on his face.

Chapter 669

Delbert nodded without hesitation.

"Okay, I understand."

Sadie smiled and said, "I have some things to attend to, so I'll leave for a while. Rest well at home."

Delbert simply nodded.

After Sadie left, she instructed the butler, "Keep an eye on him more closely recently. If there are any strange behaviors, inform me."

"Miss Sadie, are you planning to restrict his freedom?"

The butler standing nearby bowed and asked with lowered brows.

Sadie waved her hand.

"No need for that. If he's kept too tightly, it might backfire. Just have more people follow him discreetly."

"Understood."

After the butler left, Sadie stood in place for a moment, gazing at the door of Delbert's room.

In the end, she still felt unsettled in her heart.

She was like a parent of a mischievous child, always keeping a close watch, afraid that the child might run off when she wasn't looking.

Sadie sighed lightly, rubbed her temples, turned around, and left.

Meanwhile, on the other side, Harriet lay in bed, crying loudly for half the day until she finally fell into a deep sleep.

In her dream-like state, she felt particularly restless.

Her head kept shaking as she tried to break free from the dream but only sank deeper into it.

"Delbert... Delbert..."

She kept murmuring in her sleep, her hands involuntarily trembling.

She tried desperately to grasp onto something but found nothing.

Tears streamed down her cheeks and soaked her hair.

In her dream, she saw herself playing and frolicking with Delbert in Agral City when they were young.

As she looked at the young Delbert's innocent face, she tried to get closer to him, but he seemed to move further away.

She called out desperately and reached out to grab him, wanting to stop him from leaving, but her efforts were in vain.

"Delbert!"

Just as she felt disappointed, the distant figure suddenly approached her again.

As she was about to embrace him, the child in front of her, who was slightly shorter than her, suddenly grew taller than her by a lot. His innocent face became remarkably mature.

She thought her Delbert had returned, but to her surprise, as she joyfully reached out to him, Delbert collapsed in front of her. Then a pile of blood mysteriously flowed out from him, staining his clothes red.

Her man took his last breath in front of her...

"No! Don't leave me, Delbert!"

A scream echoed as Harriet sat up abruptly in bed.

Sweat and tears mixed together, wetting her face.

As she opened her eyes, she saw her mother, Miriam, and brothers looking at her with concern.

"Mom!" Harriet rushed into her mother's arms with sadness.

"Good girl, don't be sad. Delbert..."

At this point, Miriam found it difficult to continue.

After all, she could see Harriet's affection for Delbert.

"No! Delbert will be fine. He couldn't just leave me like that easily. It's impossible! Impossible..."

Harriet covered her ears, shaking her head and crying again.

Her eyes were already swollen and red from crying earlier.

Now she looked even more pitiful.

"Yvonne, don't do this!"

"If Delbert were still alive, he wouldn't want you to be this sad for him."

At this moment, all eight brothers surrounded her, comforting her with words of solace.

But Harriet didn't seem to hear any of it.

She kept muttering that Delbert wasn't dead.

Seeing Harriet like this made Miriam's heart ache even more.

Apart from others' opinions, seeing her daughter in such a state was heartbreaking for her.

Moreover, Delbert had been like a son to her since childhood.

After finally seeing them together just a few days ago and now losing him so suddenly, being an elderly person herself, she couldn't bear it and tears welled up in her eyes instantly.

Chapter 670

"Mom, Delbert isn't dead, right? He can't die. We made plans for the future together. He wouldn't break his promise. Mom, tell me, Delbert isn't dead, is he?" "Yvonne, I know you can't accept this fact, but the forensic doctor has already confirmed..." Miriam sighed heavily.

"You're all lying to me. All of you are lying to me. I don't believe it!"

Harriet directly shook off Miriam's hand, suffering a mental breakdown.

Lucas couldn't bear to see this and discreetly inserted a silver needle into Harriet's head while she wasn't paying attention.

Harriet's crying halted abruptly, and her tired eyelids struggled to stay open.

After blinking a few times, they eventually closed.

"Will this be okay?" Miriam asked with some concern.

"Don't worry, Ms. Miriam. There won't be any side effects. Yvonne will wake up after a while, and by then, she should be more lucid," Lucas assured. Seeing that, everyone sighed helplessly, hoping she would recover soon.

No one expected such a thing to happen!

In a blink of an eye, Harriet woke up again, but this time she didn't cry or make a scene.

Instead, she gazed calmly at the ceiling, lost in her thoughts, making everyone hesitant to disturb her.

The atmosphere was briefly quiet until a series of footsteps interrupted it.

Arthur cautiously entered the room, intending to speak.

However, upon seeing Harriet awake, he hesitated to say a word, unsure of what to say.

After much hesitation, he finally spoke up, "The police just notified us to... claim the body."

At these words, Harriet's vacant eyes trembled slightly.

Arthur cleared his throat.

"How about this, Yvonne? You stay here and rest. We'll go claim it."

"Yeah, we should..." Henry chimed in.

"No need."

Before anyone could say more, Harriet threw off the covers and got out of bed.

Even though her clothes were wrinkled, she paid no attention to them.

Her eyes were unfocused.

Seeing that, the Bass brothers were particularly worried.

Arthur intended to say something again but was cut off by Harriet.

"He's my husband. I'm his wife. Now that he's dead, I should be the one to claim the body."

"But you..." Arthur still felt uneasy.

"Arthur, trust me, I'll be fine."

Harriet forced a smile to reassure Arthur, leaving him with no choice but to lead her to the police station.

Later on, Harriet followed the Bass brothers into the police station in a daze.

They were led into a morgue by the police comrades, where they saw a covered body laid out on the mortuary table.

"Please accept our condolences," a police officer said before intending to give them some privacy.

Just as he turned away, a cold voice rang out.

"He isn't Delbert!"

The police officer turned back to see Harriet uncovering the white sheet and carefully examining the body.

Having shared a bed with Delbert for so long, she was intimately familiar with every inch of his body.

Even though the man in front of her was unrecognizable, she was sure he wasn't Delbert!

Chapter 671

Harriet's attitude made the police office feel helpless.

"Ms. Munoz, please accept my condolences. The dead cannot be brought back to life. You should let go. The body in front of you is indeed your husband, Delbert," he said.

"No, he feels unfamiliar to me. My intuition tells me that he is not my husband," Harriet argued, turning to face the police officer.

The police officer was at a loss. He didn't know how to comfort Harriet. He was about to seek help from others when he saw Harriet's brothers looking at him with doubt. Helplessly, he explained, "Ms. Munoz, your husband's DNA test reports were all handled by our police forensic experts. They have handled many cases without mistakes, so this report cannot be wrong.

"Moreover, it's impossible for this situation to be a coincidence. Your husband mysteriously disappeared, and then a person who looked exactly like your husband appeared. Even if that's the case, their DNA can't be the same."

Harriet refused to give up. She said, "Officer, can you let us see the forensic expert? Maybe there was some mistake in the process."

Harriet's brothers echoed, "Take us to the forensic expert!"

The police officer had a headache. He wanted to excuse the fact that the forensic expert was busy, but seeing Harriet like that, he couldn't bear to say it. Besides, her brothers were all staring at him with narrowed eyes, so he had to relent.

"Okay, I'll take you there," he said before taking them to the forensic expert.

"Here he is. I have to go back to work," said the police officer.

Harriet gritted her teeth and walked in.

"That body is not Delbert. I demand a reevaluation," she said.

"Are you kidding me? I am a professional forensic expert. How dare you come here to question my skills!" sulked the forensic expert, looking incredulously at Harriet. "I'm telling you, that body is Delbert." His tone was serious, but there was a fleeting hint of guilt in his eyes.

Harriet keenly caught it, making her more certain that the body was not Delbert.

"Brothers, he's lying!" Harriet pointed.

Levi nodded and gave a signal to Oliver.

Then Oliver grabbed the collar of the forensic expert and pinned him against the wall.

The forensic expert grunted, feeling dizzy. After recovering, he glared at Oliver and barked, "What are you doing?"

"Forcing you to tell the truth, of course," said Lucas with a sly smile, waving a silver needle in his hand. "You'd better confess honestly. Otherwise, I don't know where this needle will end up." The smile on Lucas's face made the forensic expert shiver.

He knew that these people were powerful and meant their words.

"I..." The forensic expert hesitated because he didn't want to offend Sadie either.

Chapter 672

Chapter 672

"Not speaking, huh? Fine, then don't blame me for being ruthless!" Lucas sneered, sticking the silver needle into the forensic expert's body, causing a scream to ring out in the room. "Alright, I'll talk. It was Sadie who asked me to do this," he confessed.

Compared with keeping secrets, life was more important.

"That body wasn't Delbert's. She found another body and had me disguise it as Delbert's," he said.

"Sadie!" Harriet gritted her teeth but felt relieved.

"If she's behind this, then Delbert must be alive," Harriet muttered, hopefully looking at her brothers.

But amid her joy, anger surged within her. "How dare Sadie get her hands on Delbert? I will not let her get away with this!"

Harriet fumed with anger, thinking of all the things Sadie did to Miriam. Determined to get her revenge, Harriet started to head outside.

"Yvonne, where are you going?" The Bass brothers asked, following behind her.

"I'm going to settle the score with Sadie and bring Delbert back," Harriet said.

"It's indeed necessary, but Yvonne, have you thought about it? The Bass family's house is a dangerous place. You should get well prepared before you go," Arthur reasoned.

"No matter how dangerous it is, I must bring Delbert back. I won't let Sadie have her way!" Harriet gritted her teeth, ignoring the advice.

She quickened her pace, got into the car, and drove straight to the Bass family's house, leaving her brothers far behind.

When she arrived at her destination, she gasped in shock.

"What's going on?" she said, trembling.

'Why does it look like there is a funeral? What happened? Who passed away?' She wondered.

She pushed open the door and was about to ask the servants when she suddenly saw Miriam's photo placed on the memorial tablet in the center of the hall. "What are you doing?" Harriet shouted.

Miriam was alive and well, yet someone held a funeral for her. Harriet couldn't accept it.

Losing her mind, she cut through the crowd and smashed the photo onto the ground.

"Who are you? What the hell are you doing?" someone shouted after the initial shock.

"Can't you see that the Bass family is holding a funeral? This is disrespectful to the deceased! Where is the person in charge? How can he let her in?" said the crowd, pointing at Harriet. Harriet paid no attention to them. Her gaze was fixed on Sadie, who was standing in the crowd with a smug smile on her face.

Harriet knew that Sadie was playing a trick. Harriet would not let Sadie get her way.

"Miriam is not dead. She's alive and well. Why did the Bass family hold a funeral for her? What are you up to?" Harriet said.

Chapter 673

"Where did this madwoman come from? Get her out of here!" Not believing it, the people urged the servants to drive Harriet away.

Harriet gritted her teeth and planned to continue when she heard a snort from a middle-aged man.

"Miriam is my sister. I know her situation better than anyone else. Why are you spreading rumors and causing trouble at her funeral? What are you up to?" he said. Harriet sneered and shot back, "Miriam is my mother. I know her situation better than you. She is alive and well. What are you up to by holding a funeral for her?"

"Ask Sadie about what she did to make Miriam lie in bed like a vegetable for many years. Ask her about how she made everyone believe that she was the daughter of the Bass family." Harriet looked coldly at everyone present, especially at Sadie, who stood out in the crowd.

The crowd was stunned, but Sadie reacted quickly.

"Uncles, you have to stand up for me," she said. "Miriam is my mother, not hers. She is talking nonsense."

"Besides, don't you know Miriam's situation better than me? Harriet, you're deliberately causing trouble here. You don't want Miriam to rest in peace, right?"

"Do you have to settle your grudges against me at the funeral?" Sadie said tearfully.

The others felt sorry for her, but Harriet detected provocation in her gaze. Harriet itched to rush over and tear her face off.

If it were not for Sadie, Harriet wouldn't have been doubted by her family.

Sadie intended to slander Harriet again when a commotion broke out in the crowd.

Harriet looked over and saw the middle-aged man approaching with a sullen face.

He was Miriam's brother, Felipe Bass.

"Someone, come and get her out of here!" Felipe ordered sternly.

No one objected to his decision.

"Bring more people and drive her away!"

"Yeah, this woman is rude and disrespectful to the deceased!"

Sarcastic voices came one after another.

Harriet frowned, trying to explain.

Suddenly, a figure appeared. It was none other than Lucas. Holding a silver needle in his hand, he shouted, "I dare you to touch Yvonne!"

His threat was not heeded. Lucas knew that no one would listen to him if he didn't reveal his identity.

"Get lost! Stop causing trouble!" the servants barked.

Lucas gritted his teeth, ready to fight them, but they had the numbers.

Lucas made a quick decision, leading Harriet to rush toward a side door. But just as they were about to get out, their path was blocked.

Chapter 674

Chapter 674

"Hmph! Bring it on! I'd like to try my new skills!" Lucas snorted. "Yvonne, find an opportunity to leave."

Harriet was worried. "I can't. What if they catch you?"

"So what? I don't care," Lucas said indifferently.

"But Felipe is a ruthless man. Even Sadie becomes his puppet," Harriet said.

Lucas's eyes dimmed. He was about to say something when a loud noise came from the door.

The door collapsed, and someone shouted, "See? I told you they were here."

The familiar voice brought hope to Lucas and Harriet.

On the other hand, the servants lost their momentum.

Harriet realized how reckless her actions were. She was about to apologize to her brothers, but a figure flashed past not far from the door.

Harriet narrowed her eyes, trying to focus, but the figure disappeared too quickly. She felt like it was Delbert.

"Delbert?" she called out, rushing over.

"Where is Yvonne?" The Bass brothers looked around and noticed that Harriet was missing. They looked outside and saw a figure going away. "Where is Yvonne going?" Everyone was puzzled once again, even more so than before.

They chased after her, ignoring the clamor behind them.

"Delbert, Delbert..." Harriet lost sight of him. She didn't know where to go and felt desperate, calling out to Delbert.

But no one answered her.

"Delbert, I know you're not dead. Where did you go? Come out and see me!" she said, unable to hold back her tears. Her brothers arrived and bumped into the scene.

"Yvonne, what's wrong? Tell us, did anyone bully you just now?" Harriet raised her head, saw their worried faces, and smiled bitterly. "I'm okay. Let's go."

She stood up and suddenly felt dizzy. Luckily, Levi caught her in time.

They were all worried about her.

Just then, Felipe came up with a group of people.

"I thought they had fled. I didn't expect them to still be here." The mocking voices came again.

"Leave and don't set foot here again. You're not welcome here!"

Felipe stood at the forefront, looking arrogantly at Harriet and her brothers.

"Why should we listen to you?" Arthur stepped forward, towering in front of Felipe. He was the leader of the world's number-one assassin organization, and his aura was intimidating. Everyone gasped in awe, and those defiant ones immediately shut their mouths, showing signs of backing up.

Chapter 675

Chapter 675

Arthur was not happy to see Felipe's face.

If it weren't for Felipe's indifference, Miriam wouldn't have been harmed by Sadie.

"Felipe, you are truly a cunning fox. You knew all along that Sadie was not the daughter of the Bass family, yet you insisted on protecting her. When faced with Harriet, the real Ms. Bass, you ignored her. Are you planning to control all the assets?" Arthur said.

"Why do you care? I call the shots in the Bass family. What can you do?" Felipe provocatively stared at Arthur.

He didn't care how powerful Arthur was. He was now the head of the Bass family. If he disagreed, Harriet would never be able to enter the house, unless something unexpected happened to the Bass family, which was unlikely.

Arthur was not bothered by his remarks. "Do as you please. You reap what you sow."

Arthur glanced at him and left with the others.

"Yvonne, you can't be so reckless again. If we weren't here, Felipe might have acted against you." Arthur cautioned Harriet.

Harriet nodded, thinking of that figure just now.

Since Felipe dared to keep a fake Ms. Bass by his side, it meant he could harm Harriet to prevent her from exposing Sadie's identity. They had to be cautious.

Arthur led the group toward where the car was parked when suddenly, a voice rang out behind them. "Harriet!"

Harriet turned around and asked blankly, "Anything?"

The Bass brothers were not happy to see the newcomer. Andy Bass was Felipe's son and Harriet's cousin.

But Harriet didn't know him.

Andy nodded and said, "Harriet, I believe what you said."

Harriet raised an eyebrow, but her surprise was soon replaced by doubt. Andy was a member of the Bass family. Why would he believe her without any reason? She smelled a rat. "Why?" she asked.

"I have seen you before, and I remember you. I also believe that Miriam is not dead. If something happened to her, there would have been traces left behind," Andy explained. Harriet narrowed her eyes, feeling the sincerity in his words. She sighed lightly and decided to trust him.

"Okay, I believe you. Come with me. Let's find a quieter place to talk," she said.

Andy followed them to a high-end café nearby.

Harriet told Andy about Miriam's situation, and Andy got angry.

"That explains Sadie's strange actions. Turns out she is not my cousin. No wonder she was in such a hurry to hold Miriam's funeral. Perhaps she was afraid of something being exposed or planning something," he said.

"Felipe is likely involved in her plans." Harriet glanced at Andy, lifted her coffee cup, and took a sip.

"I see. I will pay more attention," Andy said sincerely. "I'll help you. I'll bring both you and Miriam back."

Harriet believed Andy's words. Perhaps blood ties were indeed peculiar.

Sadie wandered around the villa, searching for Delbert.

'Where did Delbert go?' She wondered, feeling upset. 'Has he restored his memory and gone to find Harriet?'

Chapter 676

Chapter 676

Sadie stomped her feet in annoyance. Just then, a big figure approached her, and she found that it was Delbert.

She hurried over and questioned, "Where did you go?"

She was afraid that Delbert would regain his memory and go find Harriet.

Her harsh words startled Delbert.

He shivered, full of grievances. He looked in the direction where Harriet had just left and spoke. "Didn't you say this was my home? I went around and lost my way because this place was too large.

"I couldn't find you, and I didn't know what to do."

Sadie softened up and put on a smile.

It was good that he hadn't regained his memory.

She intended to comfort him, but Delbert held her in his arms. She was stunned and then felt pleased.

"Don't be angry, okay?" Delbert pleaded.

Sadie looked at him and wrapped her arms around his waist.

"Delbert, you are so silly. Why didn't you ask the servants for the way?" she said.

"I only remember you, and I only want to talk to you," Delbert said.

Sadie held her breath, her heart racing. She blushed and tightened her grip on Delbert's waist.

Sadie was pleased and forgot about the trouble Harriet had caused her just now.

Originally, what happened put her in a bad mood, but Delbert's hug cheered her up.

Immersed in it, she failed to detect the disgust in Delbert's eyes.

The conversation in the café continued.

"You said that you saw me before, but I don't remember you," Harriet said.

Andy smiled shyly. "When I was young, I secretly asked my mother to take me to Agral City. I saw you there. Although we were both little at that time, I could immediately tell that you were my cousin." Harriet was touched by this revelation.

"I never expected that after so many years, you could still recognize me. It really moves me!" she said.

Even Felipe didn't expect him to recognize Harriet. That might be the power of blood ties.

Andy took another sip of coffee and spoke to the Bass brothers. "Perhaps this is the power of family bonds. Even though we haven't seen each other for so many years, I can still recognize her among the crowd. Don't you feel the same way?"

The Bass brothers nodded in agreement.

Then Andy continued, "Actually, I have long sensed that Sadie is not part of the Bass family. I have even brought this up with Felipe. Sadly, he didn't believe me. He has no suspicion of Sadie at all." Andy paused and added, "And I remember that he got mad at me and warned me not to mention this matter again."

Harriet was surprised and then understood the situation.

Chapter 677

Chapter 677

After taking a sip of coffee, Andy continued, "I can probably understand why my father did this. He was adopted by the Bass family and couldn't inherit the family's business.

"So, when Sadie showed up with the token, even though he knew that she wasn't Miriam's daughter, he still acknowledged her for the sake of the family fortune.

"He wants to groom Sadie into a puppet, using her to control the Bass family."

Harriet finally understood Felipe's intention.

That was why he stuck to his statement despite knowing that Sadie was a fake. But Harriet couldn't accept his indifference when Sadie was harming Miriam. "Andy, thank you for telling the truth. I will take care of the rest," Harriet said. Andy smiled. "No worries. I don't want my father to keep making mistakes."

Then he added, "Harriet, where is Miriam now? Can I go see her?"

Harriet smiled, "Let's go together. We're going to the hospital. I'm sure she'll be very happy to see you."

Soon, Harriet led Andy to the hospital where Miriam was.

Harriet gently pushed open the door, and Andy followed her inside.

Miriam was kind to him when he was little, and he was eager to see her.

"Mom, I'm here to see you," Harriet said.

"Come over, darling!" Miriam smiled, waving at Harriet.

"I brought someone to see you today," Harriet said, stepping aside.

Andy slowly came up.

"Who is he?" Miriam asked in confusion, failing to recognize Andy.

Harriet smiled faintly, "Don't you recognize Andy? He is Felipe's son."

"Oh, I remember now. You're Andy. It has been so many years, and you've grown up. Come over and let me have a good look at you," Miriam said happily. "Miriam, I miss you so much," Andy said, happy that Miriam still remembered him.

He knew that Miriam would not forget him.

Andy stepped forward to hold Miriam's hand. "I'm sorry. I should have protected you."

"Silly child, you were little back then, and this matter has nothing to do with you. Don't beat yourself up!" Miriam comforted him, patting his head.

Harriet remembered that the Bass family had held a funeral for Miriam and revealed, "Felipe is despicable. He knew that Sadie was not your daughter, yet he resolutely acknowledged her, just to use Sadie's identity to control the Bass family.

"And when I broke into their house today, I found that he was working with Sadie to hold a funeral for you. They are heartless!"

Harriet was filled with anger, and Miriam's face fell.

"So, Felipe knew all along that Sadie was not my daughter. I thought he was kept in the dark all these years," she said.

Chapter 678

Chapter 678

"Miriam, Yvonne, we absolutely cannot let this matter rest!" Levi chimed in.

Miriam nodded. "I have given Felipe and Sadie many chances already. Since they don't appreciate it, I won't be lenient anymore." Harriet's eyes glinted with coldness. "Sadie took my identity and stole my life. I will make sure she returns everything to me."

"It seems I have to go out and dispel this rumor about my death," Miriam mused. "They held my funeral, didn't they? When they bury my body, I will appear in person to prove that I am not dead, exposing their conspiracy."

"I will try to gather evidence that Sadie is not my cousin and help you in secret," Andy said.

The Bass brothers agreed with Miriam's plan and prepared to ensure her safety.

Soon, it was the day when the Bass family was going to bury Miriam.

Sadie walked in front, holding Miriam's memorial tablet and crying sorrowfully.

Harriet hid in the crowd, feeling disgusted at her hypocritical appearance.

She must have been blind when she treated Sadie as her best friend when she was little, only to have her identity stolen in the end.

Harriet had invited a large group of reporters to expose the events of the past and ensure that Felipe and Sadie had no chance of escaping.

The Bass family showed no signs of suspicion. Felipe and Sadie stood in front of Miriam's grave, observing a moment of silence.

They were waiting for Miriam's coffin to be buried. Then this matter could finally come to an end.

Just then, Miriam stood up and sneered. "Whose funeral is being held here, mine? But I am alive and well. Felipe, why did you tell everyone that I died?" The reporters from all over Imperium swarmed over, snapping pictures.

All eyes turned toward Miriam.

The atmosphere became tense. Both Felipe and Sadie panicked, not expecting Miriam to suddenly appear.

"Yeah, Miriam is alive and well. Why did you say she was dead? What are your intentions?" Harriet questioned, helping a pale-faced Miriam walk toward them. Sadie and Felipe wanted to argue, but words failed them.

Miriam glanced at them and turned to face the reporters. "Today, I want to tell everyone the truth here. Sadie is not my daughter. Harriet is!

"I was seriously injured and fell into a coma in the hospital because Sadie pushed me down the stairs.

"Felipe knew all this but chose to ignore my life and death. He even brought Sadie back and raised her as my daughter. It shows his sinister intentions!"

Chapter 679

Chapter 679

After hearing Miriam's words, everyone present began to whisper and glance at Sadie and Felipe.

Felipe glared at Miriam. His anger was plain to see.

"Nonsense!" he shouted. "Don't listen to her. Miriam is already dead. She is an impostor!"

Sadie reacted quickly and walked to the reporters.

"Sorry, I don't know who this woman is. She is not Miriam at all. Miriam is already dead!" she said, turning to face Miriam. "Madam, it's a lie that you're Miriam, and it's a false accusation that I'm not the daughter of the Bass family. I can totally sue you.

"If you leave now, I can let the matter drop."

"Sadie, you really disappoint me. I shouldn't have saved you in Agral City back then, and you wouldn't have stolen Harriet's life," Miriam said, looking at Sadie with deep disappointment.

"Mom, it's not worth being sad for such a person!" Harriet comforted her, patting her on the shoulder.

Even though the evidence was already in front of her, Sadie still showed no remorse.

She was beyond salvation.

Felipe walked to the reporters and echoed, "What Sadie said is true. We don't know this woman, and we don't know who instigated her to come and pretend to be Miriam. Please don't believe her words. "I can vouch for my integrity that Miriam is dead and Sadie is her daughter."

Miriam felt disheartened.

"Integrity? Do you think you have any integrity?" Harriet sneered, staring at Felipe.

Felipe was annoyed and ordered the bodyguards, "What are you waiting for? Get these people out of here. Don't let them disturb Miriam from resting in peace!"

"Yes, sir!" The bodyguards were ready to act.

The Bass brothers immediately stepped forward to shield Miriam and Harriet.

"I dare you!" Their aura intimidated Felipe's men.

Miriam was thoroughly disappointed in Felipe.

"Felipe, you really disappoint me!" she said.

Harriet spoke up. "Felipe, this is the last time I call you uncle. We'll be enemies when we meet again."

"You accused us first, and yet you still act so arrogantly," Sadie barked, unwilling to be outdone. "You say I'm not the daughter of the Bass family. Do you have evidence to prove it?"

Harriet sneered, "If I can't show evidence, would I be standing here confronting you for so long?"

"Then show it!" Sadie glared at her.

"It will be here soon," Harriet said calmly, waiting for Andy to bring the evidence.

Sadie scoffed, "As I see it, you can't produce evidence and are just stalling."

Chapter 680

Chapter 680

Harriet ignored her and, inadvertently, noticed a familiar figure in the crowd.

'Delbert?' She wondered.

"Delbert!" Harriet ran away, as if she had lost her mind.

Before Miriam and the Bass brothers could react, she had run far away.

"Yvonne is gone. Chase after her!" Arthur said, leading the others to chase after Harriet.

Harriet believed she couldn't have been mistaken. That person was Delbert.

He was still alive.

Sadie saw it and groaned in her heart, 'Did Harriet see Delbert?'

She wouldn't allow them to meet.

Sadie immediately followed.

If Delbert saw Harriet and recovered his memory, then all her plans would fall apart.

"Delbert, wait!"

Harriet caught up with Delbert and grabbed his wrist.

Delbert turned slowly, revealing his handsome face, but the look in his eyes was distant.

Harriet didn't notice it, and she said, "I knew you weren't dead. Why didn't you come find me? Do you know how worried I've been about you?"

Then she sensed Delbert's abnormality.

He was looking at her like a stranger.

"Do we know each other?" Delbert asked with a puzzled look.

"Do we know each other?" Harriet murmured in disbelief. "Delbert, do you not recognize me? I'm Harriet!"

Delbert shook his head. "I'm sorry, miss. I don't know you. Is there a misunderstanding between us? Or maybe you've got the wrong person, but how do you know my name?"

Harriet was struck dumb.

Her excitement, which had just been kindled, was extinguished. "Delbert, what are you saying? We are husband and wife. How can you not recognize me?" But Delbert remained puzzled.

Just then, Sadie came up and laughed at Harriet's sorry state.

'Harriet, oh Harriet, the man you love no longer remembers you. He only has me in his heart. The man who used to dote on you is mine now,' she thought triumphantly.

Sadie pushed Harriet aside and smirked at her. "What are you doing? Haven't you caused enough trouble today? Now you're still clinging to my fiancé?"

Harriet was even more surprised. "What do you mean by your fiancé? Stop joking!"
