Chapter 551

Chapter 551 It's Just Heartbeats "Oh, then anatomy."

Seeing that Paige was not afraid at all and was even relaxed, the captain of the University of Chicago said coldly, ' Bring me the thing."

He thought that when Paige saw the scalpel and the rabbit, she would be scared out of her wits.

However, he did not expect Paige's expression was still as indifferent and cold as ever as if she was a person standing on the clouds.

The students of the University of Chicago thought that Paige was just putting on an act. She would be probably extremely scared and didn't show it on the surface.

'Oh my god, dissecting a live rabbit? I'm going to suffocate."

"This match is too terrifying..."

"This is obviously not the knowledge of our University of Illinois at Chicago.

It's beyond general knowledge..."

How could a freshman come into contact with anatomy and practice, let alone the Department of traditional medicine of the University of Illinois at Chicago, who had only come into contact with the theory and knowledge of traditional medicine...

In this competition, the University of Illinois at Chicago was destined to have no chance of winning.

'Use a knife to dissect the rabbit?" Paige raised her eyes and looked at the students of the University of Chicago with interest.

The captain of the University of Chicago sneered and said, *An anatomy is supposed to be done with a knife. You wouldn't dare to do it on a living person, would you?"

"Scared now? It's too late!"

"If you don't dare, admit defeat now and admit that the University of Illinois at Chicago is inferior to the University of Chicago. From now on, you won't participate in any competitions held by our universities. Behave yourself..."

Looking at the other party's domineering appearance, Paige smiled and said, "I mean, dissecting small animals is so boring. Isn't there a human specimen in the medical department of the University of Chicago which specialized in experiments? Just bring it here."

When the students of the University of Chicago heard this, they were all stunned!

Even the audience widened their eyes in disbelief.

What was this top scorer talking about?

A human specimen was referred to a dead body.

Did the top scorer mean that she didn't want to dissect the rabbit but the body?

It made people's blood freeze.

"If you don't dare, admit defeat now and admit that the University of Chicago is not as good as the University of Illinois at Chicago. From now on, you won't participate in any competitions held by our universities.

Behave yourself..."

Paige returned the same words that they had just said.

The captain of the University of Chicago looked terrible because he and one of his teammates had only dissected small animals and had no chance to do experiments with human specimens...

But now, a student from the Department of traditional medicine was making things difficult for him...

"Captain, she's just threatening us on purpose!"

'How can she, a traditional medicine practitioner, take a scalpel, let alone dissect a human specimen..."

"No matter how bold she is, people will laugh at her if she is not professional enough."

'Let's agree first and see what tricks she has up her sleeve!'

The captain of the University of Chicago looked at Paige, who was unfathomable and full of confidence. He wanted to accept the challenge, but he was afraid that...

What if this girl really knew anatomy?

"Stop dilly-dallying. Do you still want to compete?" Paige asked impatiently. She had been standing on the stage for a while now.

The teammates standing behind Paige couldn't help but feel excited. "Paige is so handsome! Paige is so cool!"

Sure enough, only Paige could deal with them.

The captain of the University of Chicago was in a dilemma. He braced himself to ask, "How many people do you want to compete with?"

Paige's gaze fell on them one by one, and she said in a lazy tone, "All of you, together."

This sentence was too arrogant. Many students of the University of Chicago wanted to see Paige make a fool of herself.

"Okay, you said it.' The captain of the University of Chicago thought, "Will the four of them lose to a girl from the Department of traditional medicine who often skips classes?"

Soon, human specimens were sent to the stage.

They were covered with white cloth and they were lying on a moving stretcher. The scene was enough to make many people's hair stand on end. Some of them even got up and left their seats...

These people who donated their bodies for free would be quickly frozen to negative efficiency within eight hours of death and then stored properly.

When they were needed in teaching, the temperature would be restored to 4°C to ensure the freshness of the body so that the students could carry out simulation surgery training on the real human body.

At this time, the temperature of the human specimens had just recovered. Looking at the people under the stage, Paige reminded them warmly, "If you are afraid, you can leave first."

After all, not everyone could accept such a scene.

Many people left their seats...

But more people stayed. Some of them were full of curiosity about Paige, while others wanted to see the result of the competition...

Paige made a bow to the human specimen and then lifted the white cloth on one of them.

Many people in the audience screamed and left their seats one after another...

After all, it was a corpse...

"The deceased was about 6 feet tall and in his thirties when he was alive.

His body was strong, his abdomen was fat, his muscles were full, there was no bullet hole on the back of his head, and his limbs were in good condition. This showed that he was not a prisoner who was shot to death, nor did he die in a car accident."

Paige was expressionless the entire time. She put on the gloves, picked up the scalpel, and cut the skin of the deceased.

"There are hard pieces in the lungs, which fill the patient's whole chest and erode the normal lungs and blood vessels. There is only about one-third of the normal lungs left."

Paige's gaze was calm as she concluded, "The deceased died of lung cancer, so I used this to advise the male students not to smoke. Smoking is harmful to their health."

Not only the team members of the University of Chicago but also all the students were shocked...

Paige was too calm and professional!

Such a fresh corpse was placed in front of Paige, but she was not afraid at all. On the contrary, she was able to analyze the cause of death rationally.

What was even more unbelievable was that Paige knew anatomy.

Her movements were done with skill and ease. She looked just like the surgical doctors in the hospital!

How could a freshman at the Department of traditional medicine be good at anatomy...

Paige described some of the characteristics of the deceased, then sewed up the wound and restored the body to its original state...

Her sewing skills were stunning. Two judges could not help but stand up as if they were looking at the next medical genius!!!

"It's your turn.' Paige took off her gloves, disinfected her hands, and then looked at the team members of the University of Chicago.

The team members of the University of Chicago seemed to be glued to the ground and did not move at all. They read books at night every day and absorbed medical knowledge like sponges. There were also famous doctors giving lessons in private...

But now, he couldn't even compare with a girl in the Department of traditional medicine...

The captain of the University of Chicago didn't know how long he had been stunned until the urging voice under the stage made him come to his senses...

His hands trembled. As soon as he lifted the white cloth on the other human specimen, he was instantly scared out of his wits by the unrecognizable corpse...

The other three team members of the University of Chicago were also so scared that they bent down and vomited when they saw the corpse...

Many people below the platform screamed...

Because this corpse was truly too terrifying!!
