

CEO Bride 442

Chapter 442

Leopole had a head full of silver hair, with a white beard that went down to his chest. Looking at his round and healthy appearance, it seemed he had spent his later years in carefree contentment.

He was dressed in luxurious garments. A dragon and phoenix emerald pendant that emitted a faint greenish glow was hung at his waist.

Beneath the coffin was a fine silk cloth, surrounded by a plethora of gold, silver, and jewels. The sight brought smiles to the onlookers' faces.

There was a bronze cauldron the size of a fist on his chest. It smelled like aged bronze and contrasted with the other precious antiques,

When Nash saw the cauldron, he was so excited that he nearly shed tears.

If everything went as expected, this bronze cauldron would be the Divine Farmer's Cauldron.

However, he was confused as to how such a small Divine Farmer's Cauldron could refine medicine.

'Or is it that the Divine Farmer's Cauldron has the ability to change its size at will?' he thought. Nash slowly reached out to grab the bronze cauldron.

Just as he touched the bronze cauldron, Leopole suddenly opened his eyes.

His eyes were as cold as death.

"Fuck..."

was so frightened that he collapsed to few steps back, and even a panic, "I told you to light a candle! But no, you didn't believe me!

and find

hesitate and immediately tried to search for the hidden mechanisms in the eyes anymore and followed Heidi

Nash, thank my teacher for the guidance. I've practiced the ways of traditional let out an inappropriate

and Finn both fiercely dare you laugh when Mr. Nash is paying his respects?! Are you just looking to die?'

sorry, I just couldn't help forced to hold back a snile, and it made his face though they had already stolen things from Leopole's coffin just seemed like a crocodile shedding tears.

not mean to mock Nash. He just found the situation ironic.

three times, Leopole slowly closed

"Damn... that works?"

Mr. Nash was praying for show and did not expect Leopole to remaining thoughts. It seals them inside the coffin. Over time, when exploring tombs... The Tomb Whisperer Manual

Zombies and undead

Nico looked confused. "Then why didn't Leopole turn into a zombie?"

Anders explained, "Not all intact corpses will become zombies or undead corpses. There are very strict conditions for a corpse to become a zombie. Leopole's body was not contaminated in any way, so naturally, it wouldn't have turned into a zombie or any other evil entity like the Undead Corpse King!"

After pausing for a moment, he continued, "Those corpses that were transformed were manipulated by sorcerers when they were still alive. For example, they injected pure energy into the corpses or gathered the death energy from the heavens and earth using an array formation..."

Nico nodded understandingly.

At the same time, Nash obtained the bronze cauldron.

He scanned the area again with his Third Eye and realized that the cauldron was emitting a powerful glow.

There was no doubt that it was the Divine Farmer's Cauldron.

Nash smiled as he stuffed the cauldron into his backpack.

Nico took out a plastic bag and prepared to collect the jewelry from the coffin.

The burial artifacts inside the coffin were the most valuable items in the tomb of the King of Medicine.

"Don't touch them," Nash said calmly.

They had already taken enough.

There was a line that should not be crossed.

It was also to show Leopole, the King of Medicine, some respect.