

CEO Bride 461

Chapter 461

"The warehouse... We can't let the warehouse burn," Hera said weakly.

Nash looked toward the warehouse. He replied with a serious expression, "You rest here. I'll put out the fire."

At this moment, a shadow appeared in front of Nash.

"Nash."

"Sherman, what are you doing here?"

"I've been protecting Miss Hera!"

"Hurry up and put out the fire," Nash quickly said before he carried Hera to the security booth.

There were about a dozen female workers standing next to the security booth.

The HR manager, Lori, rushed to the door when she saw Nash carrying Hera over. "What happened to Ms. Lewis?" she asked, concerned.

Help me take care of Hera. I'm going to put teeth and lift Hera thanks to her slender figure. She carried Hera into the

of hers who room. He shattered the surveillance cameras with his true energy section of the wall diminished, but then it quickly flared back up. Sherman furrowed his back of the control room right then. The intervention of someone from had come out of the workshops. They were now gathered in front of the factory. Most of warehouse. With a single punch, he made a hole in the wall closely behind Nash.

the warehouse, a massive fire was burning, and two security guards in their 40s were pushing a forklift through the flames. They were already on fire themselves.

his hand and extinguished the flames on the two guards using his true energy. However, the flames

the air, his expression in the air, indicating that someone had introduced chemical get out of here quickly! Don't come in!"

fell to the ground and writhed in pain. Nash took off his own clothes and used them to cover the injured guard's body. He then enveloped the guard with his true energy and removed all the air from inside the true energy barrier, finally extinguishing the security guard had suffered extensive burns on his face. Fingers trembling, he pointed toward a shelf that was about to be consumed by the fire.

oxygen inside the true energy barrier, the security

Nash turned to four others and said, "You take these two out."

The four guards came forward and picked up the injured security guard from the ground. Then, in a blur, they carried the guard away from the warehouse.

Nash rushed to the shelf. He channeled his energy and pushed the shelf along with a few more others away from the approaching fire to a safe area.

The components were extremely heavy, and each shelf was filled to the brim. Ordinary people would need a forklift to move even a third of one shelf.

The raging fire approached Nash, but it was kept away from him by his true energy when it was just ten centimeters away. Nash pushed over a dozen shelves laboriously, determined to get them out of the warehouse.

An explosive force swept through the area. Nash's true energy barrier broke open, and the hot air from the fire blew the dust on the ground onto his clothes, immediately igniting them.

Sherman had returned to the warehouse. When he saw Nash on fire, he grabbed a fire extinguisher and rushed over. He managed to put out the flames with the fire extinguisher, leaving Nash covered in a layer of dry ice. However, this only lasted for three seconds before the dry ice itself ignited.

"Damn, what in the world is this?" Sherman's expression was grim. He had never seen dry ice catch fire in all his years.

Nash went on pushing the shelves while explaining, "It's likely the Combustion – Enhancing Sand from the mad scientist's laboratory in Moliga. I heard the scientist created it by infusing different types of chemicals.

"It looks no different from regular sand, but it has an extremely potent combustion- enhancing effect."