

CEO Bride 483

Chapter 483

Hera had not finished processing the forms yet. She furrowed her brows and said, "So soon?"

The secretary smiled. "It seems that their last vice president has been replaced... This new one is quite a young and handsome man!"

Hera's expression darkened. "Is he more handsome than my husband?"

The secretary realized she had misspoken. Then, she glanced at Nash with a flattering smile. "Not even a tenth as much as Mr. Calcraft!"

Nash touched his face narcissistically. "Keep talking; I like what I'm hearing!"

Chuckling, Hera stood up from her office chair.

Nash also rose, casually draping an arm around her slender waist as they walked together.

Hera did not resist until they reached the door, where she gently swatted Nash's hand away.

There was no one inside the office, but there were many company executives outside.

She was worried it might give the wrong impression.

the door to entered.

men, all handsome

late 20s.

in suits,

he was not overweight.

jawline was more cool and Innovate Collective all rose from their chairs but head shorter than Nash.

the four, and Nash's presence overshadowed everyone else.

The previously easygoing

aura of a powerful CEO straight

TV

men from Innovate Collective paled in comparison to are?" Clarke Camp, the vice president of Innovate Collective, furrowed his had a formidable presence, stronger even than the

a person appear grinned. "I'm Nash, the subsidiary..."

manager? Clarke's look of replaced by disdain..

his attention

gesture. "You must be Ms. Mare's

a friendly smile. "I've already

Clarke's eye twitched as anger rose within him, but he restrained himself from making a scene.

It would only lower his status to argue with a security manager.

"Ms. Lewis... Are all the high-level executives in your company like this?"

Clarke asked with a forced smile.

His sarcasm was obvious.

Hera returned the smile. "And are all the high-level executives in your company as condescending as you?"

She could clearly see Clarke's disdain for Nash's position as a security manager.

If it were a significant client like Drake or Universal Group, perhaps she could have tolerated it.

Yet Innovate Collective was Baroque's competitor, and they had had their conflicts. Now, with Clarke disrespecting her beloved man, she naturally felt the need to stand up for Nash.

Clarke was taken aback!

His companions were stunned as well.

Innovate Collective was many times larger than Baroque.

They had come with an order to collaborate with Baroque, and they had expected Hera to warmly welcome them.

Why would she start a confrontation upon meeting?

Even if Mr. Camp was somewhat impolite, he did not outright use foul language, did he?

Nash felt extremely pleased to see that his woman was standing up for him.

He could not deny that it was a sweet feeling, indeed.