

CEO Bride 54

Chapter 54

Nash's gloves were covered with blood.

He turned to look at the nurses and said, "Prepare for a blood transfusion."

Since the Watsons had prepared a separate ward for the madam, they must also have a supply of her blood type prepared as well.

Not daring to dally, a nurse immediately went to the safe and took out two bags of blood while another rushed about looking for gauze and surgical tools.

This doctor was too sudden with his instructions. He was going to start an operation without saying much.

The Watsons looked worried.

Queenie walked up to her grandfather and asked in a low voice, "Grandpa, are you really not worried about this guy performing surgery on Grandma?"

What Nash did with her grandmother's wrist using the scalpel just now did not look like a normal operation at all.

"Then why don't you treat her illness?" Walter frowned and glared at Queenie.

Although Nash's treatment method was a little unusual, he had at least identified these parasitic bugs that the X-ray had missed.

The nurses gave the old lady a blood transfusion.

He was willing to spend the money to treat his wife’s illness on the premise that it worked.

Seeing the change in Walter’s expression, Brian could not help but tense up.

He knew very well that Walter respected him and his grandmaster because his wife needed to be treated.

If his grandmaster were to fail to treat the madam, it was likely that the both of them would remain here.

Brian wiped the cold sweat off his brows and prayed silently for Nash.

Nash’s operation lasted for three full hours.

The nurses almost fainted several times due to the things that happened. Nash had used tweezers to pick out more than a dozen small bugs from inside the old lady’s head before finally closing up her skull.

The nurses were a little confused. “We need special tools to suture the skull.”

“Let me do it.”

Nash took the needle and thread and pierced the skull easily.

He moved quickly and completed the procedure efficiently, leaving the nurses dumbfounded.
