

CEO Bride 559

Chapter 559

Contrary to her usual aloofness, Sydney currently had a sweet smile on her face. Hera was initially surprised but then smiled and replied, "He's busy right now. Do you need anything?"

Sydney was a daughter of the Zell family and held a status similar to Kai, Olivia, and the rest. She was somewhat flattered by the attention she was giving her at the moment.

"My grandfather's birthday is the day after tomorrow, and he'd like to invite him to the birthday banquet, Sydney replied and she handed over a gold-wrapped invitation.

Hera accepted the invitation with a slight smile. "I'll pass it on to him Do you want to come in and sit for a while?"

Sydney noticed they were heading out and shot her a charming smile her cute canines showing. "I have other matters to attend to. You and Nash must come together alright?"

Hera nodded. "Yes, I'll definitely be there!"

The Zell family's status in Jonford was not to be underestimated.

After having been given an invitation from Sydney herself, Hera agreed without any hesitation.

"Well then, I'll take my leave now. See you later, Hera!" Sydney wa and then got into her car,

Hera waved Sydney goodbye as she slowly turned her car around drove down the deserted road.

Hera tucked the invitation into her shoulder bag and said to Helena, "Let's go for a walk in the park. The atmosphere is quite lively over there."

Helena pursed her lips and followed Hera silently.

Nash was supposed to be her fiancé. He was once someone she belittled and called a worthless bumpkin. Now, he was someone she looked up to. If she had accepted his marriage proposal back then, what would the outcome have been?

Helena shook her head, pushing aside these complicated thoughts. She did not regret her past choices. She did not choose Kai back then. Just because of money. When comparing him and Nash, she found Kai to be slightly more attractive.

He had an air of dominance to him while Nash was like a hidden dragon emerging from the abyss. He was usually silent, but when he roared, he would astonish the world.

Helena preferred the former, and if given the choice now, she would still choose Kai.

In any case, the fact that her sister could marry Nash was something she should be happy about.

The two sisters arrived at the park. The square dancers there might look like ordinary people at first glance, but in reality, many of them were mothers of celebrities and other wealthy individuals. Surely, their descendants were either rich or noble.

In the liveliest area, two old men were playing chess.

Hera and Helena hurried over to join in the excitement.

“Haha! I play my horse behind your cannon. Checkmate!” yelled one of the men as he slammed the chess piece onto the stone table. All of his opponent’s red pieces were captured, and the people who surrounded them sighed.

“Even the King of Chess, Old Malley, can’t win against him. Just who is this old guy?”

“I don’t know. He’s beaten all of us left and right since a few days ago!

“I refuse to believe it. Old Malley, let me try. I’ll play him again!”

“Forget it. You can’t even beat my grandson within a few moves!”

Old Malley gave him a disdainful look. Sitting opposite him, the victorious old man was dressed in a white traditional robe while a long sword stood next to him.

“Pay up! We agreed on 50 bucks per game, no reneging.” The old mar in white raised his hand arrogantly and demanded.

Old Malley blushed as he fished out a hundred-dollar-bill from his pocket before slapping it onto the table.

Just then, Hera squeezed in through the crowd, yelling, “Hold on, you haven’t lost the game yet!”

She then grabbed the chariot piece and placed it under the general. With this move, she would be protecting the general by sacrificing chriot.
