

CEO Bride 60

Chapter 60

No matter how much Hera tried to convince him, Nash remained indifferent.

Hera was so angry that she rushed out the door, her eyes red.

Nash sighed helplessly.

Seeing that it was still early, he took his ID card with him to the bank to apply for a savings card.

When he brought out his checks that amounted to 300 million to be deposited, a commotion occurred in the back. The president even came to the bank in his pajamas to receive Nash in person.

By the time the transaction was settled, it was already night.

Nash ate some fast food before returning to the villa where he took out a blood-stained napkin from his pocket.

He carefully opened the napkin, and inside were two motionless white bugs.

These were the two Longhorns that he had secretly hidden when he performed the surgery on Mrs. Watson.

They were also the largest ones. One of them had feelers while the other had a single horn.

Nash took out his push-button mobile phone, located a number, and then dialed it.

Cassie was puzzled after she said that. "Nashy, why are you asking this? Could it be that you have them?"

"No, I'm just helping a friend of mine. It's alright now. Bye!"

Nash ended the call hastily after leaving that perfunctory statement.

Longhorns had a very powerful effect. They could preserve the last breath of a dying person.

If one was seriously injured and there was no medicine that could be used, one could potentially use a Longhorn to put oneself into a state of suspended animation when one was down to one's last breath.

Nash found an empty bottle in Hera's dressing cabinet, cleaned it, and put the pair of bugs in it. He then added two drops of his own blood.

The bugs wriggled in the blood, and the blood bubbled up.

To allow bacteria into the bottle, Nash pierced a few small holes in the cap.

Finally, he put the bottle on top of the closet and then clapped his hands in satisfaction.

At six in the morning the next day, the sky gradually brightened.

Stellar rang the doorbell punctually.

"Come in!"

Hearing Nash's voice from the room, Stellar pushed the door open and entered.
