Chapter 19

Gwendolyn was even more agitated at the mention of her daughter.

“No way! She's still a child! How can she possibly work at such a young age? I should be the one doing hard labor instead of her.”

Little did she know, Gwendolyn had fallen into Patrick's devious plan.

He then raised his eyebrows as he took a piece of paper and pen before writing down a promissory note.

“I don't mind having you work for me, anyway. It's quite troublesome to have a young child working.”

In truth, he would not have thought of letting Juliette work in his house, anyway. The young child would have been pampered like a little princess if she were to stay in his place.

Initially, Patrick had only wanted to tease Gwendolyn. However, after seeing her serious response, he thought that she would be the perfect companion for him, as he needed someone who could cook and accompany him to his meals.

After he was done with the promissory note, Patrick placed it in front of Gwendolyn.

“Sign it.”

Gwendolyn's fever had just subsided, and she had just woken up. Thus, she signed the piece of paper without hesitation, fearing that her daughter might be taken away from her.

Gwendolyn bit her lower lip and said, “You'll have to keep your promise, Mr. Lowen. It's me who's
