Chapter 38

Gwendolyn whispered, "I owe him money, so you can say so."

She considered her relationship with Patrick as one which was between a debtor and a creditor. That seemed to be all it was to her.

Zayden frowned. "He's your creditor?"

He thought their relationship seemed to be more than that, but he was afraid to point it out.

Gwendolyn nodded. As she exited the police station, she saw Patrick get into a car.

She followed quickly and knocked on the window.

A handsome but frigid face appeared when the car window was rolled down slowly, and he gave her a cold-eyed stare.

Gwendolyn hesitated and said, "Mr. Lowen, thank you for coming to bail me out today, but I just want to say that it wasn't I who made you do that and waste your time."

Gwendolyn was worried that he would charge her for causing him any losses in his business that morning. As an average wage-earner, she could not afford to pay him back.

When she heard Neil saying that Patrick was the one who bailed her out just now, Gwendolyn almost fell to the ground. She wanted to ask Patrick to leave her alone in the future since his time was so precious.
