Chapter 2521

Hal jumped on top of the pile of trash and started digging as if it found the target. His owner said, "Dogs have a very strong sense of smell. I'm guessing it's buried down there."

Hal barked a few times, and two villagers started helping with digging.

Soon, they found a new bag under the trash. The villager picked it up. "Is it this one?"

Colton walked forward, took it, and chuckled. "It is."

He opened it, and other than money, the ID and passport were still inside. There was also the key to a safe in the bank that was squashed behind the passport.

That was what Freyja had inherited from her grandfather after his passing. Freyja had asked Colton to keep it, so he always brought it around with him. He wouldn't be able to explain to her if he lost it.

He was glad he found it.

Freyja looked away and didn't speak.

“But after we’re married, our money will be shared. It’s normal for you to spend my money, and it’s normal that I make money for my wife to spend. There’s no need to worry that I will look down on you. Why should I marry if I can’t even let my wife spend some money?”

“My wife put her life in danger to give me a child, have to sleep with me, and spend the rest of her life with me. If I don’t want her to spend my money, I might as well stay single.”

Freyja laughed because he made total sense, but that made her even sadder. “I...”

“Alright, let’s not talk about this. I smell terrible and need a shower.” Colton was disgusted by himself. No, I can’t take this.”

She paused, then slowly got up. “There’s a shower room here. I’ll bring you there.”

Freyja brought him to the shower room, and before she went in, he hugged her from behind and chuckled. “You smell terrible too. Let’s go in together.”

“Could that boy be her brother?” asked Leia.

Freyja looked at them and didn’t reply.

Mia wheeled the boy next to the table, helped him up, and sat down. She said something to him and went to get the food while he waited there.

Freyja could notice something was wrong with the boy’s eyes. “Is he blind?”

Norman got up and walked over.

Leia whispered, "Hey, what are you doing..."

Norman sat across from the boy, who noticed it but thought his sister was back. "What are we having tonight?"

Norman sat in front of him and waved his hands, but the boy didn't react. "You really can't see."

Freyja looked at her. "But stealing isn't a great way. Even though you only target people who don't need it because you think they won't be worked up with a small amount of money, not everyone who has money will be fine with that.

"You should be glad that you targeted someone who wouldn't mind, but you might not always be lucky. You might get thrown into the lockup for a few days. If someone finds out that you're a thief, you might be beaten up and humiliated in public. They might even sell you off. Have you thought how your brother would survive without you?"

Mia had nothing to say because she had never thought about that.

"When is his surgery?"

“January 28th.”

Freyja felt around her pocket, pulled out a pen, and wrote down the phone number of the villa on Mia’s palm. “Call me in two days, and I’ll give you the address. Come see me then.”

Freyja looked at them and said, “Since the nursing home manager could get help from the villagers to help us search for a wallet, it means they respect her. Even Mia, who is stubborn, respects her. I think she must be very well-respected. The villagers probably respect her because she takes in everyone who needs help.”

Norman nodded. “That makes her a saintess.”

The night fell, and the town was quiet.

Freyja rested in front of the window and looked out at the dark forest. The moon was bright and hung over the hills, clear and peaceful.

Colton walked over, hugged her from behind, and rested his chin on the top of her head. “What’s on your mind?”

She smiled. “About setting up a foundation.”

The nun's eyes turned red. She could barely suppress her emotions as she said, "Ms. Pruitt... Are you serious?"

She had approached other organizations to ask for their investment. However, all of them had turned her down after learning that she did not charge any fees for the old people. The reason they gave was that even though they wanted to do charity, they were not going to do it for free.

Ever since then, she had never approached any organization anymore.

She did not know how to repay Freyja for making such an offer.

Freyja nodded. "Yes. It goes without saying that I've already thought it through before proposing the idea to you."

"Ms. Pruitt, I... I don't know how to repay your kindness," the nun replied, her eyes filled with tears of emotion.

Freyja got up and handed a tissue paper to her. "You don't have to repay me anything. You've been

"Alright," replied Daisy.

Seeing how disappointed she was, Nollace landed a kiss at the corner of her lips and said, "Be a good girl. After I've settled all my affairs, I'll be free to keep you company."

Daisy did not say anything.

Nollace went downstairs and summoned Madam Ames. "If Daisy wants to go out later, you go with her."

Madam Ames replied, "Yes, sir."

After Nollace left the villa, Madam Ames went into the kitchen. The maids in the kitchen were preparing lunch for Daisy. When they saw her, they greeted her, "Madam Ames."

Madam Ames nodded and said, "Is the lunch ready? I'll bring it upstairs now."

The maid handed Daisy's lunch to Madam Ames and went away. Madam Ames glanced at the nutritious meal on the tray and brought it upstairs.

A flashy-looking woman received the text message and hurriedly deleted it. Nobody would have expected that Madam Ames was a mole she placed around Daisy.

"The royal bride-to-be in the rumor? Well, I can't wait to meet her anymore."

As soon as Daisy came out of the elevator, a woman came up and stopped her. "You're the royal bride-to-be, right?"

Daisy lifted her head and squinted. She had never seen the woman in front of her before.

"Do I know you?"

The woman stretched her hand toward her and said, "I'm Cecilia Taylor, His Highness' assistant. My grandfather is an Earl, and my father is a minister in the cabinet."

Nollace massaged his nose and fell silent.

When he visited the palace the other day, his father came to him and told him about the cabinet meeting. Then, Cecilia came to the company and became his assistant. He knew that this was all done by the Taylors.

The Taylors told everyone that they were loyal to the family by mentioning their many contributions to the royal family. However, in fact, they just wanted to control the royal family.

When his grandfather was alive, the Taylors had done something behind everyone's back because they were dissatisfied with Yorrick being made Minister of Finance.

At that time, his grandfather kicked a minister close to the Taylors out of the cabinet to tell them to behave themselves. Therefore, the Taylors had been keeping a very low profile since then.

Now that his grandfather had passed away and his mother had succeeded the throne, they started to become active again.

Not only did they get Cecilia to his side, but they even started to gather up a group of people and tried to stop Daisie from becoming the princess.

When he was not the "prince," these people were not like this at all.

Chapter 2530

It was just that Cecilia was more interested in benefits than looks. However, now that Nollace's mother had succeeded as the queen, it made him the prince, and his son would be the future king.

Of course, it could only be his and her son.

Cecilia took a sip from the wine and said, "Your Highness, don't you think it's a bit disrespectful to be distracted when you're having dinner with me?"

Nollace tapped his finger on the table and said, "Ms. Taylor, I hope you understand one thing. I came here to have dinner with you because you asked me to. I'm just fulfilling your request, and it doesn't mean that I intend to have this meal with you."

The smile on Cecilia's face froze. However, she was taught to maintain her manners in a situation like this, so she kept smiling and said, "Is it because you're worried about your wife?"

Nollace did not say anything.
