

Cherished By Seven Sisters

Cherished By Seven Sisters chapter 46-A Quack Symptoms exhibited by those suffering from that condition include a weak pulse, a coated tongue, a strong urge to put on more clothes despite a high b*dy temperature, and not drinking much fluid despite being thirsty.

Although the little girl exhibited all of the above-mentioned symptoms, it was such a rare condition that Lincoln misdiagnosed her due to his carelessness.

However, Lincoln refused to admit that Emrys was right. "Nonsense! I don't even know what you're talking about!" The crowd was starting to believe Emrys' statement because of how convincing he sounded, but hearing Lincoln deny it made them doubt him again.

Even Dr. Faraday has never heard of such a condition, so it must be nonsense!

The look on Emrys' face grew cold, and he shook his head in disappointment. "A quack, huh? You truly are an embarrassment to the medical industry!" I would've forgiven Lincoln if he realize his mistake and admit to it. After all, the medical industry is built upon continuously gaining knowledge and experience.

Everyb*dy makes mistakes. What's important is to learn from those mistakes and improve ourselves. Lincoln, however, refuses to admit to his mistake even though he's clearly in the wrong. Therefore, he is not worthy of being a doctor!

Lincoln got all worked up when he heard what Emrys said. "Who are you calling a quack?" "I'm calling you a quack!" Emrys replied.

"I dare you to say that again!" "You're a quack!" Lincoln was so mad that he almost got into a fight with Emrys on the spot but chickened out when he felt Emrys' intimidating aura Not wanting to waste any more time on him, Emrys turned around and told the woman, "Ma'am, you really mustn't feed your daughter this White Tiger Decoction. I'll prescribe her another medicine." "I said it's fine for her to take it!" Lincoln shouted.

Those words had barely left his mouth when a loud smacking noise echoed throughout the area.

"Shut the f*ck up!" Emrys yelled angrily as he sent Lincoln flying with a powerful slap.

I can't believe he is willing to put that little girl's life at risk in order to protect his ego! He deserves far more than just a slap!

1/2 40 A Quack +10 pearls Emrys knew exactly what Lincoln was trying to do.

Under normal circumstances, prescribing someone the wrong medication would not result in any serious consequences. If the one he gave the little girl didn't work, Lincoln could just claim the medication wasn't as effective and prescribe her another one.

However, Emrys had noticed that the little girl was in critical condition when he observed her index finger earlier.

There are three points on the fingernail, known as the healthy, sick, and critical points. Her lunula has already reached the tip of her finger, which means she is in critical condition right now. Drinking this White Tiger Decoction will undoubtedly result in her death!

That slap had stunned Lincoln and the patients who were waiting in line for their turn.

They had no clue how serious the little girl's condition was, so they couldn't understand why Emrys would hit Lincoln over a conflict in medical opinions.

Having spent five years on the battlefield, Emrys had learnt to appreciate and value life. He couldn't bring himself to watch the little girl die as a result of Lincoln's misdiagnosis.

"F*ck you!" Lincoln yelled as he staggered to his feet and made a phone call.

"Hey, Caylie! Where did you find this barbaric savage from? Do you have any idea what he did?" he shouted the moment the call got through.

Caylie was handling a shipment of goods that had just arrived in Summerbank when she received his call. Naturally, she didn't take too kindly to being yelled at like that. "What happened. Dr. Faraday? What are you talking about?" "I'm talking about this guy named Emrys! Why would you even hire him?" Lincoln screamed angrily.

Caylie's tone grew cold when she heard Lincoln badmouthing Emrys. "Emrys is my brother, Dr. Faraday. Please show some respect when talking about him." "He's your brother?" Lincoln froze in shock for a few seconds before continuing in a much angrier voice, "Okay, I see how it is. I was wondering why he kept going against me earlier. It's all clear now that I know he's your brother, Caylie. I bet you've been wanting to get at me since a long time ago, huh? Fine! I quit!"

Cherished By Seven Sisters chapter 47-Compassionate But Firm "What are you talking about, Dr. Faraday? I— Lincoln cut her off by hanging up the phone, so she couldn't even find out what was going on. Caylie tried calling back immediately, but Lincoln had switched his phone off, and Emrys wasn't answering her calls either.

Caylie began to panic and drove all the way over to jadeborough as fast as she could.

Oh, no. Please don't let anything happen!

After switching his phone off, Lincoln turned toward Emrys and said. "You siblings brought this upon yourselves. I'm quitting my job here at Apricot Hall.

Let's see how you two keep this business running after I'm gone!" He then stormed out of the front door with his two mentees following behind him.

People chose to visit Apricot Hall mainly because of Lincoln's reputation.

Since he was gone, the patients decided to leave as well.

They all shot Emrys furious glances as they walked out of there, "I can't believe my luck! Apricot Hall deserves to be shut down!" They had been waiting in line for a really long time, so having to leave because of Emrys causing a scene did not sit well with them.

Seeing as the patients were all leaving, the woman picked up her baby and was about to leave as well.

Emrys quickly ran after her and said. "Your daughter is in critical condition, maam! We cannot delay her treatment any longer!" To his surprise, the woman turned around and yelled at him. "Shut up! My daughter might've been cured long ago if it weren't for you wasting all of our time! Please leave me and my daughter alone! You've caused enough dama as is! Go bother someone else instead!" After a brief pause, Emrys expression grew cold as he said, "I will only say this once. Your daughter will die for sure if you feed her that White Tiger Decoction.

It's up to you whether you believe it or not." Emrys felt bad for the little girl, but he knew that kindness would not necessarily be met with kindness.

The old friar had often told me that medical practitioners would need to stand firm on their principles while being compassionate. I didn't understand it back then, but I do now. I'm the Emphyrean Lord, whose name strikes terror all over the world, and yet, it took me so long to figure out such a simple theory. As for that little 1/2 15:14 Chapter 47 Compassionate... +10 pearls girl... Well, I'll let fate decide what happens to her.

With that in mind, Emrys let out a sigh and made his way back into Apricot Hall.

"You're nuts!" the woman shouted and left with her daughter in her arms.

She had only taken a few steps out the door when her daughter said weakly, "I'm cold, Mom..." Swoosh!

The next thing she knew, all traces of heat seemed to disappear from her daughter's b*dy, and her skin became as cold as ice.

As the heat energy on the surface of her skin had completely disappeared, the cold energy inside her came surging to the surface.

The woman panicked when she felt as though she were carrying a block of ice in her arms.

It really is Cold Syndrome! That young doctor was right all along!

The woman then stumbled back into Apricot Hall and shouted at the top of her lungs, "Doctor! I'm sorry for doubting you earlier! My daughter really is sick with Cold Syndrome! I should've listened to you! Will you please save her?" This time, however, Emrys was not in a hurry to treat her daughter like earlier. "I won't treat her unless I see the sincerity in your request." The woman broke down in tears when she realized that Emrys was punishing her for doubting him just now. She then dropped to her knees and begged while sobbing. "I'm sorry. doctor! I really am! I was ignorant and chose to put my faith in the wrong person! Will you please save my daughter? Nancy is still so young!

She didn't do anything wrong!" Emrys frowned slightly and let out a groan before saying. "All right, then... I'll do what I can to save your daughter." It's as the woman said. Her daughter didn't do anything wrong, so she should not have to suffer because of her mother's mistakes. Besides, this woman probably only lashed out at me because she loves her daughter, so I suppose I can forgive her Cherished By Seven Sisters chapter 48-Caylie's eyes went wide with shock and disbelief. "What? You're resigning?" Henrietta was the kind of student who barely got by in school, so she had very poor medical skills when she first joined Apricot Hall.

She had tried applying for jobs at many hospitals before, but they all rejected her.

Caylie once asked her if she would be willing to relearn everything from scratch.

Henrietta said yes and expressed her regret for not working harder while she was in university.

Sure enough, Caylie was impressed by Henrietta's sincere attitude. Since Apricot Hall was in need of doctors at the time, Caylie decided to hire Henrietta and spent a whole year mentoring her.

She would always guide Henrietta patiently whenever she encountered problems she couldn't solve. Eventually, Henrietta was competent enough to start treating patients on her own.

While they did not treat each other as a mentor and a mentee, Caylie had been playing the role of her mentor all this while.

As such, Caylie could've just asked Henrietta to cover for her shift unconditionally, but she decided to pay Henrietta twice as much for her time anyway.

Because of how well Caylie had treated Henrietta, she was shocked by the latter's sudden decision to tender her resignation.

Caylie's heart ached as she asked, "Henny, have I not been treating you well enough?" "You've been really nice to me, Caylie..." "Then why are you resigning?" "It's because I plan to take a post-graduate entrance exam. As you know, competition is incredibly tough among hospitals these days. It's really hard to land a job without high qualifications. Besides, I don't want to spend the rest of my life working in a clinic..." Henrietta's voice grew weaker as she got to the last sentence, and she even avoided making eye contact with Caylie, who was stunned.

Cherished By Seven Sisters chapter 49-Betrayal Caylie's eyes went wide with shock and disbelief. "What? You're resigning?" Henrietta was the kind of student who barely got by in school, so she had very poor medical skills when she first joined Apricot Hall.

She had tried applying for jobs at many hospitals before, but they all rejected her.

Caylie once asked her if she would be willing to relearn everything from scratch.

Henrietta said yes and expressed her regret for not working harder while she was in university.

Sure enough, Caylie was impressed by Henrietta's sincere attitude. Since Apricot Hall was in need of doctors at the time, Caylie decided to hire Henrietta and spent a whole year mentoring her.

She would always guide Henrietta patiently whenever she encountered problems she couldn't solve. Eventually, Henrietta was competent enough to start treating patients on her own.

While they did not treat each other as a mentor and a mentee, Caylie had been playing the role of her mentor all this while.

As such, Caylie could've just asked Henrietta to cover for her shift unconditionally, but she decided to pay Henrietta twice as much for her time anyway.

Because of how well Caylie had treated Henrietta, she was shocked by the latter's sudden decision to tender her resignation.

Caylie's heart ached as she asked, "Henny, have I not been treating you well enough?" "You've been really nice to me, Caylie..." "Then why are you resigning?" "It's because I plan to take a post-graduate entrance exam. As you know, competition is incredibly tough among hospitals these days. It's really hard to land a job without high qualifications. Besides, I don't want to spend the rest of my life working in a clinic..." Henrietta's voice grew weaker as she got to the last sentence, and she even avoided making eye contact with Caylie, who was stunned Cherished By Seven Sisters chapter 50-He Wants To Be A Doctor Caylie couldn't offer any counterpoints. It's not like I can stop her from pursuing her dream.

Even though she was disappointed, she still nodded, because she was a soft-hearted woman. "It's good that you have the ambition to want to do your master's degree. I wish you all the best. Come with me and get your salary for this month." "Thank you, Caylie." With that, Henrietta took her salary and left.

Seconds later, Caylie slumped on the chair as though her b*dy was drained of all energy. There are only three doctors in Apricot Hall. Now that two have left, things have turned from bad to worse. Without Lincoln to attract patients here with his fame, only a rocky future awaits Apricot Hall.

When Emrys saw the expression on her face, he comforted her, "They'll regret it, Caylie. Besides, you still have me." Caylie rolled her eyes at him with a bitter smile. "You don't even have a medical license!" "I can get something like that whenever I want." "Is lying the only thing you know?" After resting briefly, she pulled herself together and asked in a serious tone, "Do you really want to be a doctor?" He nodded, thinking she was asking him if he wanted to work in Apricot Hall. I'm not lying. After all, I'm not interested in managing the company or working at Lena's bar. The only place I want to work at is Apricot Hall. It's not a bad choice to help her make Apricot Hall big.

Unbeknownst to him, Caylie had other ideas.

The next day, Apricot Hall was closed because Caylie went to a place she didn't want to—Jadeborough Hospital.

Yesterday, when she asked if Emrys genuinely wanted to become a doctor, she was planning to help him find a job in the hospital.

That was because she had no confidence in Apricot Hall's future.

She was aware that he was skilled in traditional medicine, so she thought the most suitable place for him to work was Jadeborough Hospital.

The aim of her visit was to offer an apology.

However, it wasn't until Caylie arrived at the hospital that she learned it was Randal Hubbard's birthday -he was Patrick's son.

So, she picked a present and went to Fusion House, where Randal and the others celebrated his birthday.

When she heard the noises coming from inside the room, she panicked a little.

Then, she took a deep breath and knocked on the door before stepping in.

The room instantly went quiet the moment the people inside saw Caylie.

The awkward silence lasted for a few moments before a glamorously-dressed woman mocked, "Well, well, look who it is. Why are you here instead of having a romantic date with your rich, handsome boyfriend?" It was the person Caylie met when she was hiding from the rain yesterday- Claire.

Somewhat irritated. Caylie answered, "I'm here to give Mr. Hubbard a present." A gift for Mr. Hubbard?" The group in the room was stunned.

A weird expression settled on their faces when they saw the present in Caylie's hand.

In the past, when Randal was still chasing after her love, she always treated him coldly, which was why they were surprised that she was giving him a birthday present.

With an odd expression, Claire questioned. "Are you missing Mr. Hubbard because your boyfriend can't satisfy you?" She was still furious about being humiliated by Emrys and drenched in dirty water yesterday. Hence, when she saw her opportunity to retaliate, she intentionally said that to disgust Caylie.

While Caylie was upset with Claire's words, she still explained, "Emrys is my younger brother." It was then a slightly glowering young man stood. "Just tell me what you want. I doubt you're here to give me a present out of kindness."