Chapter: 411

Nina Marry Me

Vicente had mentioned more than once the wish of marrying Nina as soon as possible. At first, Vicente didn't dare to say that directly. Now that Nina knew Vicente's biggest secret, Vicente became bold and went directly to the point.

"I'm serious. Will you marry me as long as I help you get back your ring?"

"You are in such a hurry. I really think that you like me." Nina's eyes were cold and her tone was serious. It seemed that she was telling a truth, not a joke.

Vicente said, "You really don't know how to joke.

Just wait for me. I'll get the ring back for you soon." With a confident look on the face, Vicente promised, "Next time when we date, you will get the ring."

"Date?" The corners of Nina's mouth twitched. "How dare you say that. It's weird for a woman dates a person who is both male and female."

"Others don't know I'm a woman. Don't let it slip, or no one will be willing to marry you and take care of your child." Vicente reminded Nina again.

"Do you really care about me or worry that I won't marry you?" Nina saw through Vicente.

Vicente smiled. "It hurts our relationship, Princess Nina. You know it, but you do the love of the little princess?"

The little princess guesses that the man is Nangong Earl. Is it because she misses him?"

"Yes, I miss you so much." Nina replied. She glanced at Vicente lightly and then looked at the seagulls flying over the sea.

The white seagulls sometimes flew across the sea, causing ripples, and sometimes flapped their wings to play with each other.

Nina stared at the flying seagulls and said, "We two should be members of them."

Seagulls fought bravely at the top of the waves, symbolizing freedom, purity, unyielding and courage to fight.

This was the unyielding soul deep in Nina's heart and the desire deep in Vicente's heart.

"Yes." Vicente didn't notice that there was a glimmer of light in her own eyes, but Nina saw it.

Nina hadn't seen such light in Vicente's eyes before. It was like that a faint light came out from a dark curtain which was accidentally scratched.

Something was opening in Vicente's heart.

"We two can be seagulls and also mandarin ducks." Vicente said and opened the box, where a ring was shining.

Vicente stood up and knelt on one knee with a smile. "Nina, marry me."

The Ring Is Back

It was hot in mid-July. The sun in the sky shone down on the trestle bridge on the sea. Nina was sitting under a huge sunshade. When she turned her head, she slightly narrowed her eyes and her expression was changing.

She was surprised for a moment. When her eyes fell on the ring in Vicente's hand, she was surprised and pleased.

Nina looked at Vicente excitedly.

Vicente smiled and winked at her. At that moment, Nina felt that the light in his eyes was as bright as the ring in his hand.

"Marry me?" Vicente shook the ring box on purpose, not hiding the sly look in his eyes.

Nina kept staring at the ring.

It was the ring that John put on her finger when he proposed to her. There was no second ring that was exactly the same in the world.

She remembered the letters carved on the inner side of the ring: J&N.

John and Nina.

It was hard for her to hide her excitement on the way to see Vivian that night. She touched the ring in her hand and looked at it again and again before she found the carved letters.

However, it was a pity that she fainted before the ring could get the warmth of her finger. When she woke up again, the ring had already disappeared.

Now the ring appeared in front

she will completely separate me from John."

A trace of sadness flashed through Nina's eyes as she spoke. Vicente couldn't bear see her sad face. "I'm not the only one who can promise you. I've persuaded the queen to give me your ring, and I'm sure she won't make it public. Trust me."

Vicente said confidently, almost raising his hand to swear with his own life.

"Did you really persuade my mother?" Nina thought about it carefully and judged from her understanding of Vicente that she was indeed a person with all aspects.

Vicente rubbed his forehead and asked, "Can we trust each other?"

"Build it slowly." Nina patted heavily on Vicente's shoulder, which made him feel pain and almost fall down.

Vicente took half a step back in pain and widened his eyes in disbelief. "You not only put me down easily and but also slapped me hard. Didn't you kill your husband?"

"It's you who are weak." Nina said honestly.

Vicente was so angry that he almost jumped his feet. "Can you not let me lose face?"

"He is a proud man." With her right hand touching the ring on her left ring finger, Nina looked at the direction of Lexingport City. She missed him.

'I miss you, John'

She missed him so much.

The news of Vicente's successful proposal to Nina went virus on the Internet, covering all the streets and alleys of the whole C Island with the speed of light. Everyone knew that the beautiful little princess of C Island was going to marry the young earl Vicente of the famous Nangong family who had a good reputation and held great power.

Vicente was the prince charming of many girls, and Nina was the dream lover of many boys. Now Vicente woke up many boys from dreams and broke their hearts into pieces.

On the contrary, the girls talked about the love story between Nina and Vicente with great interest.

It was more like a made-up story than a talk.

Netizens made up stories of "childhood sweethearts having secret crush on each other", "political connection by marriage without love", "a quarrelsome and loving couple dating for many years", etc. In the end, among this kind of stories, the most popular one was themed "God never disappoints an infatuated lover. Nangong Earl finally calls Nina his."

The netizens all sighed with emotion that every cloud had silver lining.

I

our highness."

"I see." Nina laughed heartlessly.

With Vicente's explanation, the strange look in Bruce's eyes disappeared.

Anne looked back and forth between the two of them and found something fishy. Why did the relationship between the two who didn't get along well at the beginning suddenly advance by leaps and bounds?

On their way back, Anne brought up this question, and Bruce was also confused. But he answered it with the online "quarrelsome lovers" and Nina's and Vicente's history.

"We didn't get along well with each other in the beginning. Aren't we good now? Some people say they are quarrelsome lovers. Enemies and lovers are destined to meet. They will end up sleeping on the same bed.

"Well..." As soon as Anne opened her mouth, Bruce insisted, "It must be so. I'm sure my guess is right."

Bruce succeeded in persuading his wife.

The lunar July 7th Festival was coming soon. This would be the wedding day of Nina and Vicente.

There was no wall in the world that would not let the secret out. This news was known to John who was thousands of miles away.

Misjudge You

"John, I have told you to go to C Island to find my sister as soon as possible. Why didn't you do it?"

John received a call from Leon when he was in the middle of a meeting. He left the meeting room, leaving his employees there, who were confused.

They wondered, 'Such a situation only appeared when his wife was still alive. Now that his wife has passed away, who will be able to make him do so?'

They kept exchanging glances and guessing whether John had a new girlfriend.

Richard coughed lightly. All the people present sat up in silence.

Richard was different from Henry. Richard was good at martial arts. As long as his fingers moved slightly and made a sound, others would be afraid of being beaten by him.

John was already frightening enough. Richard was now John's assistant, which made them never dare to act rashly.

The meeting room became silent again. Through the glass, Richard looked at the cold back of John.

Richard knew that this phone call must have something to do with Nina, otherwise John wouldn't have left suddenly during th na married Vicente.

Helpless, Nina could only shake her head and ask the maid to leave. Then she let Mrs. Nangong hold her arm all the time.

Jett Nangong sneered, "Vicki? Princess Nina, she doesn't treat you as her daughter-in-law. She treats you as her dead daughter. Can you bear it?"

"Is there any difference between a daughter and a daughter-in-law?" Facing his provocative eyes, Nina said, "Oh, yes, there's difference. A daughter is more intimate."

"Princess Nina is so considerate." Jett Nangong sneered.

On the day of her wedding, Nina knew that he was against Vicente, so she didn't want to talk to him. She said indifferently, "Cut the crap."

Jett Nangong smiled. "I'm not here to make trouble. I just want an explanation."

Nina knew that he was indeed making trouble.

Nina looked up at him. "What explanation?"

"She grabbed my wife's face and made it full of blood. Do you think I should come and ask for an explanation?" Jett Nangong's eyes became malicious and ferocious. He pointed at Mrs. Nangong, who was hiding behind Nina.

Mrs. Nangong shrank her neck and dared not look directly into Jett's cold eyes.

At the same time, a bodyguard took out his phone and played a video in front of Nina.

Mrs. Nangong grabbed Jett's wife's hair and scratched her face. There were women roaring crazily everywhere. The servants came up to pull the two away, and Mrs. Nangong couldn't be stopped and she was just like a bull now.

The woman's face was indeed scratched by Mrs. Nangong.

"The evidence is conclusive." Jett waved his hand and asked the bodyguards to put away the evidence. His eyes were burning with anger. "Give my wife an explanation."

Nina frowned. It seemed that Jett wouldn't let it go until she gave him an explanation today.

"What do you want?"

"It's very simple." Jett restrained the anger in his eyes and shifted his eyes from Nina to the timid Mrs. Nangong. "Leave her to me."

"No way." Nina refused decisively and reached out to pull Mrs. Nangong to her back to protect Mrs. Nangong.

Jett expected Nina's answer, so he said, "Then let Vicente have a talk with me."

"He hasn't come back yet." Nina vigilantly looked at Jett. T ed her face and mouth because she was talking nonsense. She cursed you. Humph, bad woman, she deserves it!"

Then, Nina asked the servant to help Mrs. Nangong leave.

There were only the four of them left in the large living room. Jett's face changed slightly. He sneered before Nina could speak, "You believe a madman's words."

"You know whether my mother-in-law is lying or not." Nina turned around and looked into Jett's eyes. She raised her chin slightly and said, "If you are reasonable, you should know the cause and effect of the matter first. You just showed me a video representing the result and wanted me to give you an explanation. That's too unreasonable."

Jett gritted his teeth and said nothing.

"I remember that there are many surveillance cameras in this castle. We should go and check the surveillance video." Nina slowly poured herself a glass of warm water.

She was a little thirsty after talking so much just now.

The air suddenly became much quieter, so quiet that Jett heard his gritted teeth and stared at Nina with a complicated expression in his eyes.

Why was Nina so hard to deal with?

"Yes, I am pregnant." Nina reached out her hand to touch her lower abdomen. Her face, which had just been as cold as ice, was like the spring water that had been melted by the warm sun, shining with the radiance of maternal love.

Hiding his astonishment, Jett looked at Nina's belly. When she reached out her hand to touch her belly, she pressed her loose clothes, and Jett saw that her belly bulged slightly. She was indeed pregnant.

How could she be pregnant?

Jett had added medicine to Vicente's food a long time ago. Vicente shouldn't be able to make babies.

Jett frowned.

"Are you really pregnant? Are you just getting fat after being fed by Vicente?"

All of a sudden, a cold glance was shot at him, and Nina's face darkened. When she looked at Jett, she felt something strange in his eyes. She asked tentatively, "Is it strange that I'm pregnant?"

"No, no, not at all." Jett shook his head and denied.

He answered so quickly that Nina had to be suspicious. She didn't know the specific grudge between Vicente and Jett, nor did she have any clue to suspect Jett. She just st

Don't do this in front of the children. If the children follow your bad example in the future, I will press you to the ground and beat you."

"They are only three-month fetuses. Don't panic." Vicente replied in a female voice, "The babies are too small and they won't follow bad example."

"Babies can also perceive the outside world in the belly, so there are so many parents to do prenatal education." Nina was very concerned about the babies in her belly. Now when she touched her belly, she seemed to feel the existence of two babies.

"You're right. I'd better be serious." Vicente said seriously, "But you just said in front of the children that you would press me on the ground to beat me, aren't you too violent? It is a bad example for the babies, won't it?"

Nina was stunned, "... It seems to have some influence."

"Look, you haven't set an example yourself. How dare you talk about me like that?" Vicente glanced at her.

Nina smiled sheepishly.

"By the way, do you want to tell your brother about your pregnancy? I can get in touch with him." Vicente suddenly asked her.

The Numbness Of Vicente

Nina thought for a while and said, "No, I don't need it for the time being. My brother cares about me the most. If he knows that I'm pregnant, he will try every means to come back. If my mother catches him, I'm afraid he will go to a further place to study."

"Is there anything wrong with studying abroad?"

"Do you really think it's an overseas study tour?"

"Is it not?" Vicente asked in confusion.

Nina shook her head and said, "No. I heard from my father that my mother didn't allow Leon to go out with a penny, and she didn't allow him to reveal his identity. "

"So he is penniless now?" Surprise flashed through Vicente's eyes, but he was not surprised at the thought of Queen Anne's character. "Don't worry. It's not a problem for your brother to make money with his brain to support himself."

"My mother has also thought of it." Nina felt sorry and self-reproach for her brother. "It's all because he helped me run away from home, so my mother restricted him everywhere. He won't die, but the quality of his life is not good."

"Gee..." Vicente's heart ached for no reason. "It's not an overseas study tour. It efits. How greedy they are!

As long as I'm not by my mother's side, they stimulated my mother to do something out of line, and then used it to threaten me. Since my father passed away, my grandfather had a grudge against my mother. Later, my mother went crazy. He hated the two of us together and tried to protect Jett's family!

The more Vicente said, the angrier he became. But he could only stay here to be angry. He could not resist the elders at home at all.

Nina's eyes darkened.

In the past, Nina felt that she was unfortunate. It turned out that there were many people who were more unfortunate than her, and even the pain she could not imagine.

"Why is your mother crazy?" Knowing that it was not appropriate for her to ask this question, Nina asked out of concern.

Vicente gave a meaningful look at Nina, and then kept silent.

About two or three minutes later, Vicente's face darkened and his voice became depressed. "My brother died of food poisoning when he was three years old. After my mother told me something, she was taken away by my grandfather. When she came back, she was completely crazy."

Vicente recalled what had happened when he was three years old. He felt as if it had happened yesterday, haunting him like a nightmare. He didn't remember how he had been through these years.

"Do you know what my mother told me that day?"

Nina shook her head and sat beside Vicente. As soon as she approached Vicente, she could feel the pain around him, which was suffocating.

She put her hand on the back of Vicente's cold hand and stared at his side face quietly. His long and thin eyelashes trembled slightly.

"My brother and I were twins and we looked almost the same. I liked to stick to my brother. He had short hair and I also had short hair. I wore the same clothes as he wore. Except for my mother, no one could distinguish the two of us were brother and sister.

My brother died from food poisoning on the spot, and there was no time for rescue. My mother pulled me to a place where no one was around and told me that the person who died was me, it was me who died, not my brother. From now on, I will be my brother, and I will be Vicente. The person who died is Vicki.

I don't understand why my mother did this. She just blankly said that I am Vicente, not Vicki. My mother, James stepped forward and said, "Emma is weak. I'll push you with her."

"Thank you." Emma looked at James with a smile.

James raised his eyebrows with a smile, "If you really want to thank me, you can do something practical. I don't accept oral gratitude."

"What do you want?" When Sam suddenly spoke out, James almost answered his words subconsciously.

James was so smart that he didn't say anything shameless in front of the old man. James paused for a moment, "Grandpa? What do you mean? "

"You must have transfused a lot of blood to me during the operation, right? Although this is what you should do as a junior, I still want to thank you. What do you want, as long as Grandpa can give you, I will satisfy you. " Sam said sincerely.

James paused for a moment again, "Grandpa, did you make a mistake? I didn't transfuse blood to you. You were out of danger when I came back. "

"You didn't transfuse blood to me?" Sam turned to look at the person behind him.

James shook his head firmly, "No."

Sam squinted his eyes, only the sound of the wheelchair rubbing on the ground could be heard.

If it wasn't James, then who was it?

Why did they hide it from him?

Chapter: 420

I Want To Marry Vivian

At New Year's Day's dinner party, John was the last person to take a seat.

Next to John and Jessica, there was an empty seat, which was specially reserved for Sir and Jason by Sam

Jessica sat in her seat and glanced at the side face of John from time to time. He was as cold and hard as ever, not giving her a good look.

The two of them hadn't spoken for more than half a year since Sam had an accident and Jessica begged him to marry Vivian.

Jessica knew she was in the wrong, but she also felt guilty. She had tried to ease the stiff relationship between the two of them, but she hadn't even seen brother's figures for a long time. Richard had claimed that John was busy, and it had always been like this.

Her brother didn't see her, but John often took James with him.

Knowing that her brother didn't want to see her, Jessica stopped disturbing John.

This was the first time they had seen each other in half a year. Jessica found that John was much thinner. John wore thick clothes in winter and Jessica could see his figure. But the outline of his face was more outlined, with his hair cut short.

It was cold in Lexingport City's winter. She wondered whether John would feel cold outside.

There was a hint of worry and pity in James' eyes, careful or not. My sister likes Roman."

James stressed the word "sister" on purpose, indicating that Emma should not have anything to do with Roman, who was his sister's man.

Emma could tell the jealousy in James' voice. She chuckled, "Okay."

"Ah!" Suddenly, Dora stood up and scolded James with a red face, "James, why did you break your promise? You promised not to tell them!"

"What? Did I promise you?" "An accident," said James with an awkward smile.

"Humph!" Dora was so angry that her cheeks bulged up.

Angela glanced at her husband and said, "Our daughter has fallen in love with someone."

Daniel nodded. "The person who can make John remember should not be bad."

"Dad, mom!" Dora blushed, but no one answered her.

"John, when Daniel and I have time, can we go to your place to have a look?" Angela asked.

John nodded, "Yes."

Sam, who was sitting on the chair, suddenly beamed with joy. "It's really good news. Our Dora has grown up. I'm so lucky."

Seeing that everyone didn't react too fiercely, the red clouds on Dora's face gradually dissipated.

"I happen to have something to tell you." The smile on the table faded away when they heard the low voice of John. John said calmly, "I want to marry Vivian."
