It's dad. He's been trying to call me since last night," explained Luke.

He called dad. Ben and I sat silently, watching our older brother pacing around.

"Sure dad, see you later. And dad? Thanks," Luke said to our father.

"Great news. Dad said he had some spare time today and as the weather is so fantastic, he fancied a drive. So he suggested pick

Introduction: Good personnel assistants are hard to find.

I sat up at the edge of the bed still naked. I rubbed my sleep filled eyes waiting for them to adjust to the attack of the morning sun. Why don't hotels have curtains that fully black out the windows? I was starting to calculate the possible monetary reasons wh

I didn't take maintenance into account when I purchased the property. It just didn't dawn on me how hard it was to find people to take care of the place. I found it annoying to have to fit them into my schedule. It would have been alright if it was infrequent but, this house and it's grounds required weekly attention. I also didn't like having all

"Don't take it personally Robert. I was impressed with that oil deal you brought me in on. Not many people could have put together that regulatory side step. All my lawyers and accountants told me I was going to take a bath. Instead, we made quite a tidy profit." He let the compliment sink in before he continued. I was still waiting for how he foun

"I have been doing that for 30 years and no perversions have left these lips yet." She said as if she disapproved but, was resigned to her place. She had an expression like a disappointed grandmother. She caught my drift immediately and her response left me cold. I wasn't going to hire her so I covered my tracks.

"The duties of this position can easily be handled by one person at a third of the price you are asking. I don't see how I could justify your salary request. I am not saying you couldn't be the best caretakers in the world, I am just not sure that second best isn't good enough." I had begun laying the groundwork for the rejection. As lovely as they

"As you say sir, let me show you to your table." He headed off into the main dining room. We only made it past a couple of tables before I spotted Darla's smiling face. She stood when she recognized me. Stunning was an understatement. Her red curls were pulled by a green ribbon and styled to cascade down her shoulders. Her soft green dress fit perf

I dropped the roses on the ground and stepped on them as I turned and slammed the door behind me. I could hear the two talking fast and furiously behind me as I descended the stairs. I thanked God that this was early on a Friday. I would hate to have to go to work the next day after a discovery like this. As I reached the bottom step I put my work

I felt a love for my younger sisters. Carmen was studying to be a Psychologist and Nadine was studying to become a doctor. Both were as beautiful as our mother. Both my sisters protected my mother in her time of grief and tried to do the same for me. Carmen, a light brown haired woman age 23 who slightly resembled Carmen Electra, and Nadine, a blon
